Several of Johnson's supporters bought luminarias – small, paper bags that display cancer survivors' and victims' names – from her. At about 9 p.m. Friday, all the luminarias sold for K-State's Relay were lined around the track in Ahearn and lit up with luminaria lights, accompanied by a powerpoint presentation of all of the names. Then, the lights were dimmed and participants walked several laps in silence, in honor of those who have suffered from cancer.

"That was what really got me," Johnson said. "All those bags just showed me how big cancer is. I mean, every bag represented a person, and there were hundreds – it gave me goosebumps."

BEHIND THE SCENES

Because of the cold temperatures and storm predictions, this year's K-State Relay was moved inside at the last minute from its usual spot at Memorial Stadium to Ahearn. Though this set Relay events back about an hour, the evening ran smoothly with only minor amendments to the event list and schedule.

Jeremy Mason, senior in computer science and logistics chair for this year's Relay committee, said the committee members had worked hard all day Friday to make sure Relay still had the effect people typically expect, despite having to move everything inside.

"It was pretty challenging to re-adjust everything we'd been planning for months, but it worked out better than we thought," he said.

Mason said though it's often stressful being on the Relay Committee, he loves the time he spends planning technical, behind-the-scenes effects like lighting and spacing. He said the only significant disappointment of the night was having to relocate human bowling to the K-State Student Union. However, he said he was pleased that there was room for most of the other planned activities, like Kool-Aid pong and food distribution.

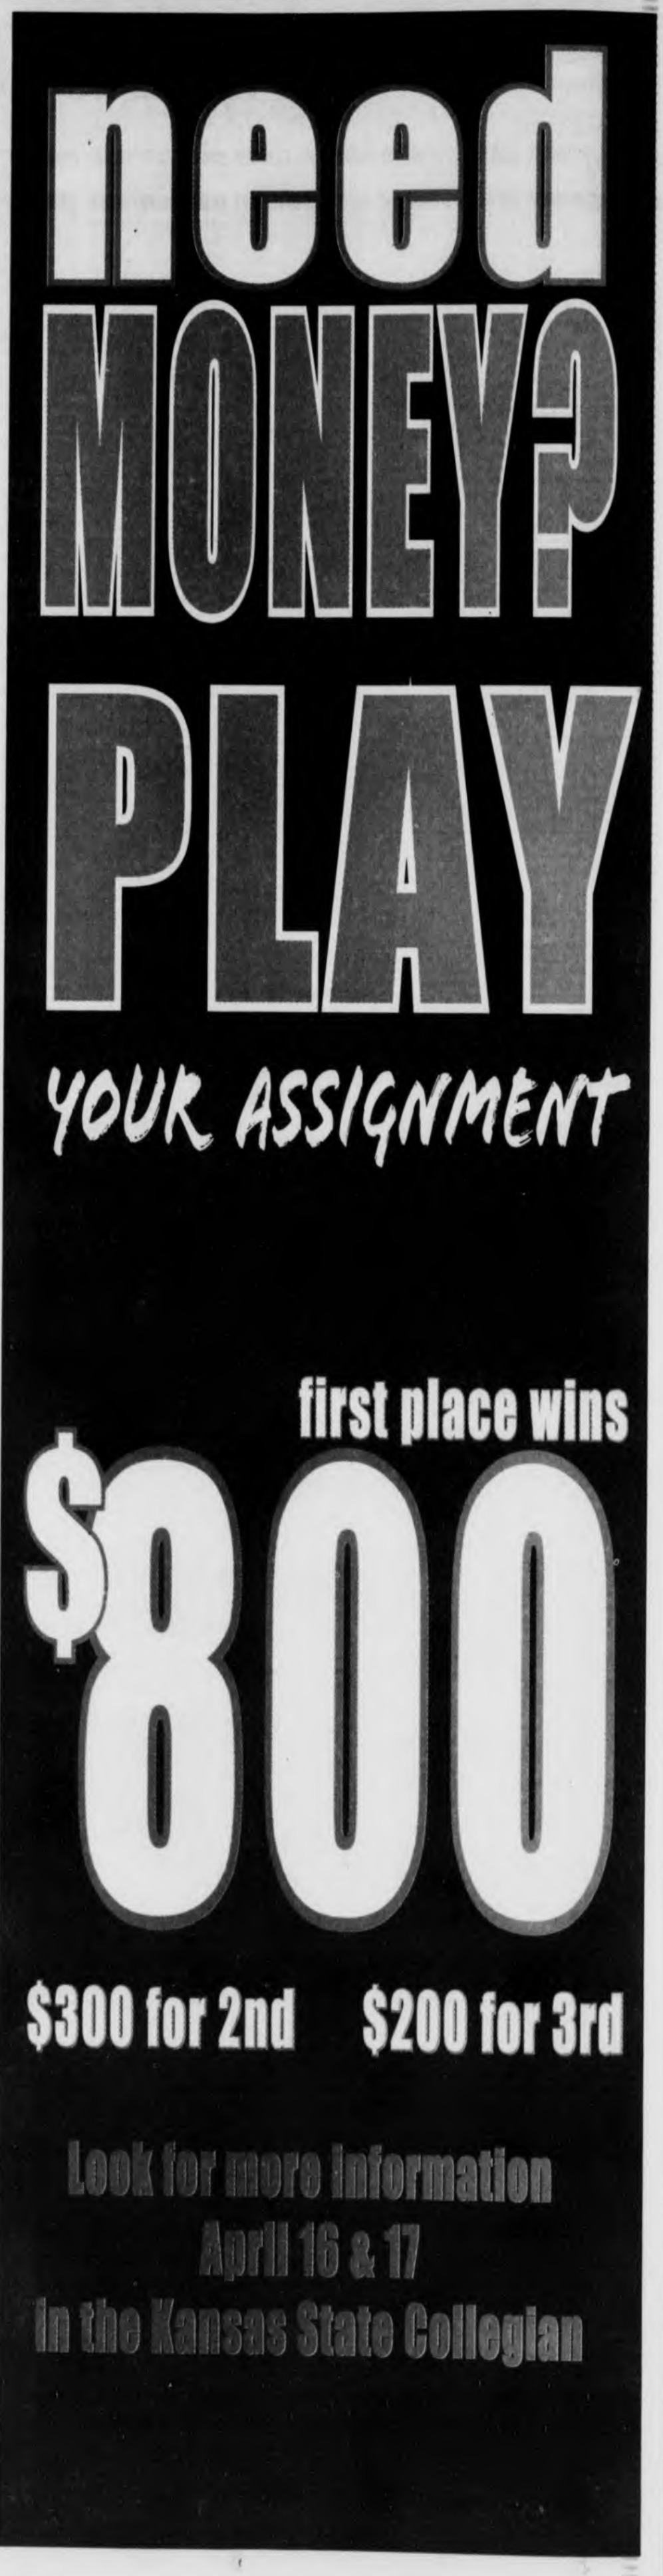
"Our original four to five hours to set up was cut down to about 20 minutes," he laughed. "We really had to think about how to get everything in there.

"That's why I just love this job, though. I get to serve relayers in ways they might not even know, like the making sure the lights are off during the luminaria ceremony and the DJ's mic work. We really see the blood, sweat and tears behind everything."

Relay's DJ, Mitch Phillimore, Wamego resident, has been in charge of the event's music since it began in Manhattan in 1998. He said he started out working for Relay through Complete Music because he needed extra money. Now, he does it for free because he loves supporting the cause and the relayers.

Phillimore has become a familiar face at the annual K-State Relay for Life, pumping up the crowd with dance music and scavenger hunts.

"All these young people here are so encouraging to me," he said as relayers shouted their song requests up to his DJ station on Ahearn's second-floor balony.



"Ok, Ok," he said, leaning over the balcony railing, joking with the persistent relayers. "I'll play 'Piano Man.'"

Even for those involved in the Relay who weren't survivors, team members or serving behind the scenes, the night was a reminder of the tragic effect of cancer, Deutsch said.

And as for her momentary flashback, Deutsch said she doesn't know who bought a luminaria for her friend Heather Henning, but that the anonymity of the situation is an example of how widespread cancer's effect can be.

"It was just so encouraging to see Heather's name up there and to know that someone else here was walking for her too," Deutsch said. "I appreciated it, deeply."

Weekend's crimes include burglaries

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

BATTERY

A female K-State student was attacked this weekend, according to a press release from Capt. Donald Stubbings of the K-State Police Department.

An unidentified man knocked her to the ground, then pulled her by her hair near Putnam Hall. According to the victim, the man suddenly stopped the attack and ran away.

The student received injuries to her leg and foot, according to the release.

The attacker was described as a possibly white male, about 6 feet tall, with dark, curly hair. Stubbings encouraged anyone with information to call the campus police.

BURGLARY

A burglary also was reported on College Avenue over the weekend. A Coonrod construction trailer was broken into.

The break-in occurred overnight and was not discovered until the employees reported to work the next day.

A desktop computer, monitor and printer were stolen. The items were valued at $2,600, according to the report.

INJURY ACCIDENT

A pedestrian was hit by a car at the intersection of Denison and Hunting avenues Thursday night.

The injured pedestrian, Christopher Schell, was transported to Mercy Regional at about 10 p.m.

The driver of the vehicle, Ruo Liang Bao, was issued a ticket for failure to yield to a pedestrian in a crosswalk. The driver was not believed to be under the influence, and no arrests were made.

EMS DISPATCH

Police responded to a medical emergency Saturday night in Marlatt Hall when Jeff Rosenberg, resident assistant at Marlatt, called to report an extremely intoxicated individual.

The EMS and fire department were dispatched, but when the EMS arrived on scene, the student refused to be taken to the hospital.

PROPERTY DAMAGE

A man called the campus police to report his wife's car had been vandalized Saturday night, according to the report.

Police arrived on the scene and found the car had smiley faces drawn on it. The next car over also was vandalized, and the windows were smashed in.

POSSESSION

A student in Goodnow Hall was issued a notice to appear for possession of marijuana Monday morning.

Police were called when the smell of marijuana reportedly was coming from one of the rooms in the residence hall.

Stubbings said the rash of marijuana arrests coming recently from Goodnow Hall are not because the problem is getting worse, but because the staff is learning how to better identify the signs of marijuana use.

"We do an annual training with them in recognition of controlled substance or marijuana," Stubbings said. "Based on their training, they are able to identify during their hall checks."

'I am a Wildcat forever': Beasley declares for NBA Draft

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Freshman forward Michael Beasley announced he would be leaving K-State for the NBA draft during a press conference at 5 p.m. on Monday.

Beasley thanked his coaches and said he would continue to support K-State even though he had decided to move on from the program that he had led to its first NCAA tournament win in 20 years.

"After consulting with my family and advisers, I have determined that this is the best course of action for me at this time," Beasley said. "K-State will always be special for me, and I cannot think of a better place to be a student-athlete. The people in and around Manhattan have made this the best year of my life, and I definitely will come back and visit and support the school as much as I can."

Beasley also has shut the door on any thoughts of returning to K-State by hiring an agent; Joel Bell of Bell Sports, Inc., will be representing Beasley. Bell has also represented Detroit Pistons center Theo Ratliff, Sacramento Kings forward John Salmons and Portland Trail Blazers guard Steve Blake.

"Money is a very important factor," he said. "I think that it's the right decision for me and my family, financially. I feel that by me going to the NBA, I can take care of my family and make sure our lives are better."

Freshman forward Bill Walker also has made himself available to be drafted. After several newspapers reported it Monday, K-State Sports Information confirmed Walker would be leaving K-State but he was not planning to hire an agent, which would give him the opportunity come back for his sophomore campaign.

Beasley is projected to be the No. 1 draft pick to the Miami Heat by www.draftexpress.com and the No. 2 pick

Greensburg goes green

KSU architecture students help town rebuild eco-friendly

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The small town of Greensburg, Kan., was devastated by an F5 tornado – the largest and most dangerous kind – on May 4, 2007. Now, almost a year later, the city has begun the rebuilding process in an unconventional way, and the K-State Department of Architecture is lending a helping hand.

Aaron Vanderpool, fifth-year student in architecture, said Greensburg is working to make its town the first green community in the nation. Architecture students are assisting by developing complexes to help educate community members on ways to create sustainable and environmentally friendly homes, offices and facilities as they rebuild.

The project is called Greensburg Cubed, and the complexes are just that – 10-by-10-by-10 foot mobile cubes. Each cube, or pavilion, provides information on a different aspect of sustainable living – which includes what green building materials are available, how to use them and where to purchase them – and will be on display in various areas in Greensburg, Vanderpool said.

The architecture students working on the project started with ideas for 11 different cubes, he said, and after extensive planning and research, narrowed it down to three, which they have begun constructing.

"As we continued to refine different ideas," Vanderpool said, "we really sat down and thought, 'What can we feasibly do? What materials do we already have?' And we only had a month and a half left, so we decided on three."

The three chosen for completion, which will debut in the town on the anniversary of the tragedy, are the Green Haus, the Recycling Bin and the Ice Cube. A fourth cube, the Litter Box, will be constructed and hopefully completed during an architecture intercession course this summer, said Larry Bowne, assistant professor of architecture.

THE CUBES

The Green Haus has been designed to educate contractors and community members on how to construct a home comparable to those LEED certified, Bowne said, without having to go through the certification process.

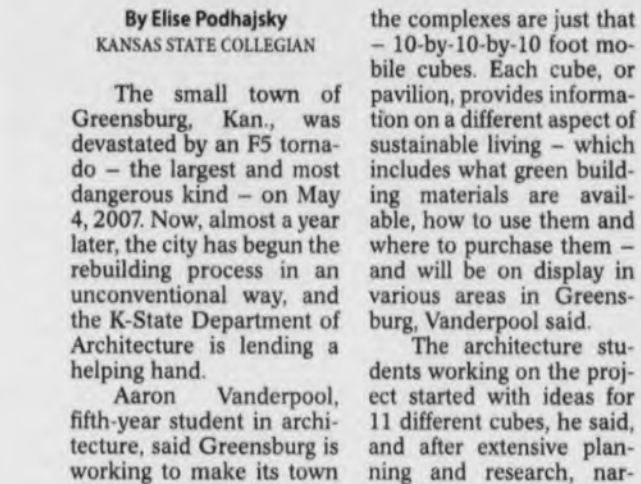
"It's very difficult for private property owners to get LEED certified," he said. "Greensburg asked us to put together a checklist cube, to learn how to be compliant without going through process of LEED."

Bowne said the goal of the cube is to give Greensburg citizens a place where they can learn about the available materials and technologies for rebuilding primarily single-family homes like insulation technologies, water storage and innovative building materials and systems.

Prior to the tornado, Bowne said, there was no recycling program in Greensburg. The community is striving to create a comprehensive program, and the Recycling Bin is offering comprehensible ways to do so.

"We're going to make a pavilion that has several recycling bins," he said. "The whole pavilion will be portable so they can take it to high school games, county fairs – whatever public events happen in town – and folks will know how to recycle their things."

Bowne said the cube also demonstrates what can be made with recycled materials, and as much as possible, students are building the Recycling Bin and the other cubes with reclaimed and recycled materials.



The Ice Cube idea originally began in the architecture studio before the Greensburg efforts as a research project and attempt to show how students in a university setting could make an appropriate response to natural disasters and human tragedies by providing clean water, Bowne said.

"The idea originated out of that research effort, and the thought that once a town has been destroyed, it might not have access to fresh drinking water," he said.

Changing Lives Campaign concludes with $529 million

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Signs like this are posted on several buildings on campus. The signs thank the people who contributed to the 427,215 gifts received during the 7-year campaign. Of the people who made gifts during the campaign, 36,392 were first-time donors to K-State. 100 individuals or corporations made gifts that total or exceed $1 million and 8 of those gifts exceeded $5 million, and 2 have exceeded $10 million.

The Changing Lives Campaign has surpassed its $500 million fundraising goal by more than $29 million. This is the most money ever contributed to a single campaign in K-State's history.

The campaign, which began seven years ago, raised millions for student success, faculty development and improving the learning environment. The campaign was designed to ensure the future of K-State students and faculty. K-State alumni and friends throughout the country have participated in the campaign as donors and campaign volunteers.

On Saturday, thousands of K-State students, faculty and alumni came together to celebrate the success and ending of the Changing Lives Campaign. At the event, Jon and Ruth Ann Wefald, K-State president and first lady, revealed the campaign final total of $529.5 million to a crowd of about 7,000.

The evening also included a thank-you concert featuring Sara Evans, the Academy of Country Music's 2005 Female Vocalist of the Year.

Hatesohl to replace Phillips as mayor

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

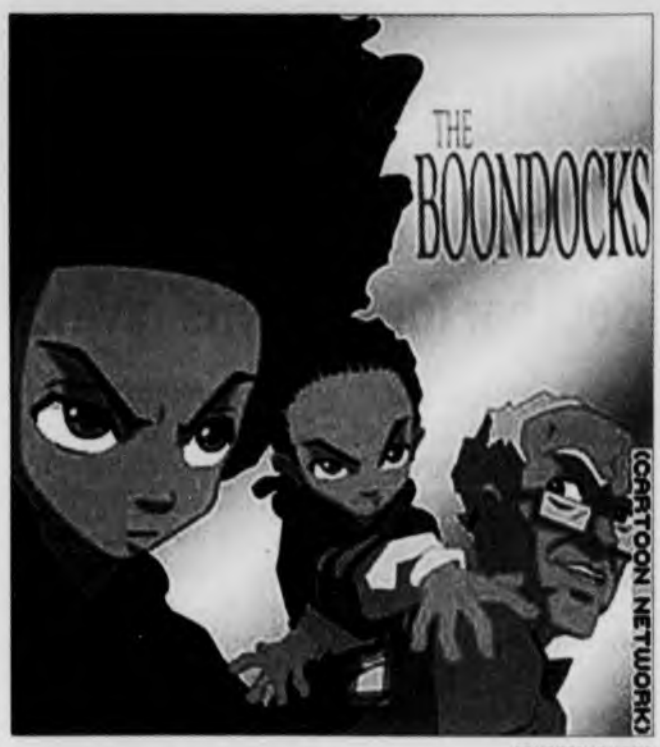
Manhattan Mayor Pro Tem Mark Hatesohl will replace Tom Phillips as Manhattan's mayor today.

HATESOHL

The reorganization of city officials happens each year based on the proportion of votes each commissioner receives during elections.

Hatesohl owns a chiropractic center in Manhattan, which has been in operation since 1984, according to the Manhattan Web site, ci.manhattan.ks.us.

He originally was elected in April 2003 to a two-year term as a city commissioner. In April 2005, he was re-elected to a four-year term, which is what qualified him for mayor. Hatesohl said he would like to make meetings go more quickly, the open periods more constructive and get the downtown redevelopment project moving as fast as possible.



Hatesohl said he will encourage businesses not to request more this year than what they did the previous year.

Mayor Tom Phillips said Hatesohl will do a good job as mayor.

"He's been on the commission now for probably five years," Phillips said. "He has a good understanding of the function of the commission. Mark will be a good mayor for the community."

Phillips also said he was most proud of the civility that was demonstrated within the commission during his term.

"We don't always agree," he said. "I think we've been able to, under my leadership, allow a civil dialogue to occur in the community."

Creator of 'The Boondocks' to speak tonight on controversial cartoons

By Whitney Hodgin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Aaron McGruder, creator of "The Boondocks" cartoon and comic strip, will speak about the political nature of the comic strip and animated series at 7 tonight in Forum Hall.

McGruder is the keynote speaker for Alpha Week, an annual event hosted by Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity to showcase the various social and service events the club participates in, said adviser Brandon Clark, senior in elementary education.

Clark said the fraternity invited McGruder to K-State because of the popularity of his comics and their message.

"These entertaining and controversial cartoons have deeper meanings," Clark said. "The politics of 'The Boondocks' spark debate about issues of race."

The comic and show are centered around a black family that serves as a mouthpiece to McGruder's opinions of U.S. politics and race relations. Clark said students would benefit from going to the lecture, which will be mostly in question-and-answer form, because they can discuss why they do or do not agree with him.

McGruder will be available for autographs after the lecture.

TO THE POINT

Architecture department sets bar for students' giving

The students and faculty in the K-State College of Architecture have been working on projects in the classroom, which will help the progress to rebuild Greensburg, Kan. Thanks to their projects, the town will eventually be an energy-efficient landmark. The architecture students are gaining skills and enhancing the community at the same time. They could be drawing plans for and making models of a fantasy building that possibly will never be built, but instead they are investing their talents in a project geared toward creating sustainability in a real community.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Other colleges at K-State should take a hint from the architecture faculty and students and gear their work in class toward something that could actually be used for good in the real world. Not only could it possibly make a difference in a community, it also adds to students' résumés, both in experience and philanthropy. Employers often are much more interested in what their employees have done outside the classroom, and projects that are graded by professors and peers and are then used in the community are even better.

So, faculty, when assigning work for students, consider how it could be used outside of class, because it could enhance the community and help students when they leave college and search for jobs.

Deferred prosecution for Big Business unfair

JOE VOSSEN

President Theodore Roosevelt was known for his tough stand against the unfair business practices of the nation's largest industries. He also was the first president to successfully challenge the power of huge, private corporations like Northern Securities and Standard Oil.

Roosevelt enjoyed tremendous popularity during his years as president. His domestic policies of trust-busting and strict regulation were admired by the citizenry. His crusade against corporate barbarism was taken up by the U.S. Department of Justice, a bureau that faithfully kept watch over American industry for signs of criminal activity like monopoly, trusts, scandal and fraud.

Through 2002, the department aggressively exposed the fraudulent practices of countless businesses – most will remember the recent brouhaha surrounding the dissolution of energy giant Enron and accounting firm Arthur Anderson.

In the last five years, however, it seems the relationship between the federal government and unscrupulous businesses has grown considerably cozy.

An increasing number of corporations suspected of criminal activity by the Department of Justice has been allowed to forgo prosecution and public trials by agreeing to fines, reforms and outside monitors who investigate the company. These arrangements are called deferred prosecution agreements.

According to a Jan. 10 article in The New York Times, the number of deferred prosecution agreements between the Department of Justice and big businesses rose from three in 2003 to 35 in 2007. The agreements allow corporations under suspicion of wrongdoing to skip a potentially damaging jury trial. Instead, they pay fines and allow outside monitors to examine their operation and recommend reforms.

"In general, such agreements result in companies acknowledging wrong-doing by not contesting criminal charges but without formally admitting guilt," wrote Eric Lichtblau in an Apr. 9 Times article. "Most agreements end after two or three years with the charges permanently dismissed."

Deferred prosecution agreements are unfair to the average citizen and consumer because they lack transparency. The Department of Justice makes many details of the deferred prosecution agreement private – including the names of the outside monitors who are hired to investigate the company under review; sometimes the department might not even know who a company has hired.

In fall 2007, a U.S. attorney appointed by President Bush approved a deferred prosecution agreement that appointed a consulting firm led by John Ashcroft – President Bush's former Attorney General and Christopher Christie's old boss – as independent monitor of a medical supply company suspected of criminal activity. The contract was worth more than $28 million. The Department of Justice did not discover the blatant impropriety until December.

Because deferred prosecution agreements allow the companies under investigation to hire their own outside monitors, it is impossible to ensure these monitors stay objective. The department is considering changes to its policy, but any amendments cannot come soon enough.

In the meantime, corporations offer monitors huge contracts to influence their recommended reforms. The amount spent is still less though than the money they risk losing in an uncertain jury trial. Deferred prosecution agreements allow businesses that break the law to write a check and walk away.

For more than a century, the federal government and the Department of Justice have played a role in protecting consumers from unscrupulous business practices. Deferred prosecution agreements might streamline justice, but it is time for congressional oversight on a practice that appears to offer businesses an easy way out for criminal activity.

Obama's support, momentum will win election

ADAM PHAM

Any election review claiming to be comprehensive is decidedly not if it fails to offer the reviewer's forecast.

If political commentators won't divulge their favorites – in both the personal and the speculative sense – then they shouldn't be in the business of punditry, should they?

Yet it's a paradoxical symptom of the entanglement of American politics and media that talking heads, who are paid entirely on the basis of their opinions, are forced to maintain an artificial and castrated neutrality.

One might ask "How did this come to be?" In modernity, pundits are only an endorsement or two away from political office themselves – and vice versa – and they are more aware than anyone that their commentary never occurs without consequence. Deniability is even more valuable to a certain kind of ambitious pundit than it is to a politician.

Notwithstanding its actual incidence, since when has political neutrality been a virtue? Could any informed person be said to be without political persuasion? No, of course not, and I'm no exception; I'm to the left of most Collegian readers, and in fact, probably to the left of most people.

But this bias is hardly crippling, and it allows me to urge without reluctance that if any pundit ever tries to stake a claim as a disinterested observer, it is one's own power, right. Furthermore, my obligation as a rational consumer of information is to ignore this person.

Ryan Nickell | COLLEGIAN

That being said, Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., will win the election, and handily. And moreover, he should.

The first point does require a disclaimer: To win a presidential contest "handily" is a different notion now than it once was, even in the recent past. In the election of 1984, almost 20 points separated then-President Reagan and Walter Mondale, whereas in the most recent election, only a little more than one-tenth of that separated President Bush and Sen. John Kerry.

The acrimony and partisanship of the last few years will exclude the possibility of an outright landslide, but my suspicion is that Obama still will win by more than five points.

The reasons are diverse; 4,000 American lives and $3 trillion have been spent in Iraq, and Americans and Iraqis alike ultimately have gotten little in return. On the domestic front, one bureaucratic scandal after another has emerged, each more disgraceful than the last; jobs and capital are fleeing for terra firma; and our health-care system continues to be an international embarrassment. The largest liability of all, of course, is the bankrupt economy, and not only does the GOP continue to support its disastrous fiscal policy, McCain – in contrast to Obama – unabashedly vows to continue it.

The second point is somewhat more contentious. While Obama's politics are far more sensible than those of his opponents' and his strengths are monumental, his flaws are of equal prominence. His relationship with Trinity United and the Rev. Jeremiah Wright always has been his most devastating blemish; the United States is not prepared to accept a president who is an apologist for racism,.

He has lesser faults as well. Among others, he does lack the traditional sort of experience, and he also seems to have developed a disturbing cult of personality around him, a cancerous overgrowth of his charisma. But these objections simply won't be enough. He has too much support and too much momentum, and he'll have his chance to prove his thesis on an international stage.

If he's successful, that reserved little boy from Hawaii could very easily become the most important black man in the history of the United States. He has certainly done his part; now we must do ours.

Threatening messages found on university campuses

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO – A message scrawled in a university bathroom – "Be prepared to die on 4/14" – left not just the college's campus empty Monday, but also those of two adjoining high schools and a pair of nearby elementary schools.

After precautions were taken at St. Xavier University on the city's southwest side, Malcolm X College evacuated students and canceled daytime classes Monday after a similar threat was found in a bathroom at the campus west of downtown. And Michigan's Oakland University was closed Monday because of threatening graffiti mentioning April 14.

The closures, two days before the anniversary of the Virginia Tech shootings and two months after the deadly rampage at Northern Illinois University, illustrate the challenge such threats pose to school administrators, who have to decide just how seriously to take them.

"I can see why they're doing it for the safety of the kids. But I see it as over the top," said Lynn Ruggiero, whose daughter is a freshman at one of the high schools that shares a campus with Xavier and closed Monday.

Ruggiero said she figures whoever wrote the threat "is getting a certain satisfaction" from putting thousands of Chicago students out of class. Still, she knows school officials have a hard time pleasing everyone.

"If they hadn't closed, people would have said, 'How come you didn't?'"

St. Xavier and Malcolm X are located about 15 miles apart, and despite the fact that the threats had similar wording, there was no indication they were related, Chicago police spokeswoman Monique Bond said. The graffiti at St. Xavier was widely publicized over the weekend, and also was in updates the college placed on its Web site.

While St. Xavier decided Friday to close until further notice, classes at Malcolm X resumed late Monday afternoon after bomb-sniffing dogs swept the campus.

Oakland University, an 18,000-student state school about 20 miles north of Detroit, planned to resume classes Tuesday. The graffiti that prompted its shutdown also made a reference to "4/14" but didn't specify a type or time of an attack, university spokesman Ted Montgomery said.

School administrators' decisions about handling threats can be made easier by having a plan in place should a crisis arise, said Larry Consalvos, senior vice president at iXP Corp., a security consulting firm which works with universities on campus safety. Knowing how they'll deal with the chain of command, first responders, communication and alarm systems is vital, Consalvos said, and allows administrators to decide when to monitor a situation and when to shut down a campus.

"I don't think you can be cavalier about the seriousness of any threat," Consalvos said.

In the Chicago area, two elementary schools and two high schools near St. Xavier decided to cancel classes Monday after a Saturday morning meeting between school officials and city police.

The fact that the threat mentioned a certain date helped administrators at Evergreen Park Southwest Elementary decide to shut down, district superintendent Craig Fiegel said.

CITY COMMISSION

City receives grant for day-care facilities

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City commissioners will decide whether to accept a federal earmark to help improve two day care facilities in Manhattan during tonight's meeting.

SNEAD

"The city, working with Sen. [Pat] Roberts, was able to secure a $500,000 earmark last year as part of the [city] budget," Commissioner Bruce Snead said. "The [funds] are given to the applicant to accomplish the projects by the applicant and not by someone else."

Snead has served on the committee to acquire these funds for the past 18 months. The money will be given to the city to help the KSU Child Development Center and the Manhattan Day Care and Learning Center build new playgrounds and a new facility.

The KSU Child Development Center will build a new facility on the edge of campus, according to the agenda. The city will help build up to four new playgrounds, one for infants, one for toddlers, one for preschool and one for school-age children. The new facility will increase the capacity from 158 children to 230.

"[The grant] augments their budget and enables them to stretch their budget to build more slots," Snead said.

MDCLC plans to build a new facility, with the grant money going into the building of the classrooms, Snead said. According to the agenda, MDCLC provides services for 55 children and hopes to build a new facility to provide care for 175.

MDCLC is looking for a site on which to construct the new day care and needs 1.5 acres of land. MDCLC hopes to receive the land by donation. The estimated cost of the new facility is $3 million. MDCLC will pay for the construction with grants, donations, loans and revenues.

Out of the $500,000 grant, $245,000 will go to each day care and the remaining $10,000 will go to the City of Manhattan to cover filing fees and administrative costs associated with each project. The projects are determined to be completed by 2009, according to the agenda.

The meeting will begin at 7 tonight in the commission meeting room at city hall. The meeting will also be broadcast on local cable Channel 3.

"I also feel when you're the best player in college basketball, it's time to take on that next challenge. Everyone has to treat that decision individually."

Frank Martin
K-STATE BASKETBALL COACH

BEASLEY | Freshman said he was still trying to make a decision as late as Monday

Expected statement comes with light, easy tone

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Freshman Michael Beasley and coach Frank Martin respond to a question during a press conference Monday evening. Beasley announced during the conference he would be leaving for the NBA after one year as a Wildcat.

There was laughter, smiles and an overall light tone to the press conference when freshman forward Michael Beasley announced he was leaving K-State for the NBA.

WENDY HAUN

After all, when he told the crowd that freshman guard Jacob Pullen was his biggest influence on his decision and coach Frank Martin replied, "That's a first," the crowd of journalists, TV cameramen, photographers and basketball players could do nothing but laugh.

When a reporter asked him if he was picturing himself playing in the NBA when he attended a game between the Los Angeles Lakers and the Los Angeles Clippers, he said, "I was too busy watching Kobe Bryant."

With the laughter and that trademark smile of his, it almost made everyone forget that he was calling us together to tell us he was leaving us.

Did everyone see it coming? From a mile away. Can anyone blame him? When you consider the signing bonus, the endorsement deals, the national exposure and the salary, I don't think there's a person out there who would say he or she would turn it down. He risks so much playing another year, but college will be here forever.

When Beasely looks you in the eye and describes how much he has enjoyed K-State, it's easy to believe. He said he went back and forth between his options and was still grappling with the decision as late as Monday morning, but it was time to take his game to the next level – so I applaud him.

It's very rare that you see a freshman who is so physically dominating in college basketball and there wasn't much left for him to do. He brought the glory back to K-State basketball, gave the fans their first NCAA tournament victory in 20 years and will still be a representative of the university for years to come.

No matter where he goes in the NBA or what he does in the future, next to his name on his ESPN.com profile, it will always say, "College: K-State".

Who knows? I might have to start watching the NBA. I will tune into the NBA draft so I can hear, "The No. 1 pick to the Miami Heat will be ... Michael Beasley."

All-in-all, he's doing a really admirable thing. He's giving up a once-in-a-lifetime college experience, something everyone should have, in my opinion, to take care of his family and secure their finances for the rest of their lives.

While everyone in Manhattan was disappointed in his decision (mostly because it was inevitable), I heard the collective sigh of everyone else in the Big 12 Conference who doesn't want to have to face him next year.

Go out, Michael Beasley, and do our university proud. We'll all be watching, cheering you on.

to the Seattle Supersonics by www.nbadraft.net. The draft will be June 26 at Madison Square Garden in New York City. K-State has only had one overall No. 1 draft pick in its history - Bob Boozer, who went to the Cincinnati Royals in 1959. Beasley will also be the first player since 1990's Steve Henson to be drafted from K-State.

"If I made any kind of pitch to try to convince him to stay in college, the pitch I was making would be for selfish reasons," said coach Frank Martin. "I don't agree with that. I think the decision has to be what's best for the young man, not what's best for me and Kansas State. If it's what's best for my career and what's best for Kansas State University, then my advice to him was, 'Mike, you have to stay in school.' ... I also feel when you're the best player in college basketball, it's time to take on that next challenge."

Many, including Martin, speculated that Beasley would never have been in a Wildcat uniform if it weren't for the age limit in the NBA which says players must be at least 19 or be one year removed from high school. However, Beasley said his decision to attend K-State helped him out in more ways than one.

"I think the rule is great. I know it helped me out a lot," he said. "In one year of college, I got stronger, I got smarter. I matured a lot and I was out on my own a little bit. It helped me out all around, on and off the court."

Beasley's mother, Fatima Smith, was also at the press conference. She said following basketball season, she "let him breathe" and didn't pressure him to make any decision.

"It was still a battle, up until [Sunday] night or even [Monday] morning," Smith said. "Bottom line is, he decided to make the decision."

Smith described herself as a proud parent after her son's decision was announced and said she still had not decided whether she would remain in Manhattan with her other children or follow Beasley, but she said she still wanted to be involved in Manhattan.

"I love this town," she said. "I'd love to be a part of this town in some type of way past Michael being in college. We just have to come to some decisions on how that can happen."

Though Beasley has moved on from K-State, Martin said he's sure Beasley will always be associated with the school.

"I don't want to say that we got lucky with Mike because we knew what he was about," he said. "We knew his people. I think he is going to continue to represent Kansas State basketball for the next 15 years, 82 times a season. Any time you get that kind of person promoting your basketball program, I think it's a plus.

"The part that's made it the best is that Mike has put our brand out there again. It's helped people know that Kansas State basketball is back."

Cats to play Creighton, look to end 2-game losing streak

By Mike DeVader
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team looks to bounce back from a disappointing weekend series against No. 30 Baylor as they travel north to take on the Creighton Blue Jays tonight at 6:30 in Omaha, Neb.

The Wildcats hope to snap a short two-game slide but are also trying to avoid losing seven of their last eight games. The lack of strong starting pitching and timely hitting could be to blame for K-State's recent troubles. However, coach Brad Hill said the problems can be solved with one element – consistency.

"We need to regroup and play better baseball than we have been," Hill said. "If we can't get excited, then we have problems. We've been flat, and we haven't approached the last couple games with the same type of aggressiveness we need."

Creighton is coming off a series loss to No. 5 Wichita State but did win its opening game against the Shockers 7-3. The Jays had a chance to win the series but let the third and final game slip out of their grasp, falling 3-2.

K-State matched up well against Creighton in their contest at Tointon Family Stadium on March 26, dominating 11-1.

In that game at the end of March, the Wildcats were able to jump on the Jays in the very first inning, putting the game to rest from the start. In a game filled with walks, right fielder Jason King unloaded the bases with a towering grand slam over the right field wall.

K-State was cruising, and Creighton couldn't recover.

Hill said he was impressed with how the Jays played the Shockers over the weekend, and he also added the Wildcats need to start playing like they did when Creighton was in town.

"They're a good program," Hill said. "You couldn't tell we were up 11-1 with the kind of effort they put up. They play hard, with energy, and they don't quit. We need to play like we did the last time."

Sophomore pitcher A.J. Morris gets the start for the Wildcats and it will be the Humble, Texas, native's second start against Creighton this season. Hill said Morris has been one of the most reliable pitchers for K-State this season.

AD Krause balances old with new

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bob Krause, K-State's vice president of institutional advancement, was hired on April 4 as K-State's new Director of Intercollegiate Athletics after Tim Weiser resigned in March to become the new deputy commissioner of the Big 12 Conference. Krause recently sat down with the Collegian to discuss his new job, the future of the athletic department and how he plans to balance his time between his old job and his new one.

KRAUSE

How was the transition period during basketball season?

A little hectic, to say the least – trying to get everything going in one direction while having two teams qualify for postseason and all the logistics there and trying to keep our staff moving forward at the same time.

Those are really times – when we particularly look at the Big 12 tournament – to get together with our alumni and supporters, and those days were running pretty long. We came through those and got a pretty good handle on where we are financially in the department and all the issues that were on the board and where the momentum was and all of that stuff.

What was your initial response to hearing that [K-State President] Jon Wefald wanted to hire you?

We had talked through that situation and really had looked at a variety of options, all the way from a traditional search to a search firm, like we had used last time. The more we analyzed the situation and the more he gathered input, we came down to this as an option, and he had to think long and hard about it.

When we analyzed everything, it's an operation that has had a dotted line to my office since I've been here for 22 years. It's a matter of saying, "OK, let's take that knowledge. Let's capture that momentum and move ahead with our building program and our fundraising program, and let's fly it this way."

What's currently on your to-do list for the athletics program?

Ohh, [laughs]. Let's list the item list on the inside and the outside. On the inside, getting to know the people; we're obviously wrapping up our [2008] budget and going into [2009]. We're making sure we've got our goals set and knowing where we are. We've got a major building project coming up, and once the budget is put together in the legislature, that will give us $45 million in bonding authority, and we'll begin to make those decisions in terms of architect selections,

Wildcat rider places 4th at Zone championships

Junior Hannah Schroller placed fourth in intermediate fences Sunday at the IHSA Zone Championships competition hosted by the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

SCHROLLER

Schroller was the only Wildcat rider to perform at Zones for the English squad and led the Wildcats on Oct. 20 when K-State hosted an IHSA Hunt Seat Show in which she placed first and third in intermediate fences.

During her K-State career, Schroller has finished first once in intermediate equitation on the flat during the North Illinois Hunt Show during the 2005 campaign. She also placed first during a varsity equitation on the flat competition in February 2006.

Carmelo Anthony arrested on DUI charge

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER – NBA All-Star Carmelo Anthony was arrested early Monday on suspicion of driving under the influence of alcohol, hours after his worst game of the season.

The Denver Nuggets forward was arrested on Interstate 25, police said. He was alone in the car and pulled over for weaving and not dimming his lights.

Detective Sharon Hahn said Anthony failed a series of sobriety tests. He was charged with DUI and then taken to police headquarters before being released to a "sober responsible party," Hahn said. Anthony is due in court May 14.

Mark Warkentien, the Nuggets' vice president of basketball operations, said the team was aware of the situation but declined comment. The Nuggets did not practice Monday and Anthony wasn't available. He's expected at practice Tuesday.

Anthony's attorney, Dan Recht, said his client consented to a blood test, but results won't be available for about two weeks.

The Nuggets (49-32) moved a half-game ahead of Golden State for the eighth and final playoff spot in the Western Conference on Sunday night when they beat Houston 111-94. Denver can clinch a fifth straight postseason berth by beating Memphis at home Wednesday night or if the Warriors lose at Phoenix on Monday night or against Seattle on Wednesday night.

In February, Anthony was ticketed in Colorado for driving 25 mph over the posted speed limit. A hearing is set for next month.

Hair salon in Union obscure, but provides students with convenient service

By Lacy Skinner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hidden on the lower level of the K-State Student Union, beyond the bowling alleys and the Subway restaurant and just before the arcade, stands Crimpers Too Hair Salon.

The Crimpers Too Hair salon, a mini version of the Crimpers Hair Salon located on North 11th Street, is often overlooked by many people.

"The salon's always been here, but a lot of people don't know the salon is down here; I didn't even know it was down here," said hair stylist and Crimpers Too employee Taisha Hall.

Lindsay Medlin, manager of Crimpers, said Crimpers Hair Salon was started 31 years ago by a woman named Lucille Crum.

Owner Cheryl Wilson from Crum's Beauty College bought the salon from Crum nine years ago. Four years later, Wilson decided to open a salon in the Union.

"Cheryl named it Crimpers Too because it's an extension of the larger salon here in Aggieville," Medlin said.

Hall said working for Crimpers is the first time she got to be her own boss.

"I worked for franchises, but I came to Crimpers to see how I'd do with my own clients," Hall said.

Hall said she has always loved working with hair. She has been styling hair for six years and has been working for Crimpers since November 2007.

Initially, it was her mother who inspired her to become a licensed hair stylist.

"My mom told me if I was going to do hair – get paid for it," she said.

While she loves to do hair, Hall is working on getting her college business degree. But for now, she said she is just happy to get paid for what she enjoys doing.

Hall's individual style not only benefits her as a stylist, but her talents help keep her customers at Crimpers happy, too, Medlin said.

"Hall has a great reputation. She's been with us for about five years. She's well liked and brings great clientele to us," Medlin said.

One of the most rewarding experiences of being a hair stylist at Crimpers, Hall said, is that she loves to see the satisfied faces of customers after she styles their hair.

"The most rewarding thing is people are happy and giving people change. Change is good," she said.

Hall receives her share of customers, though Friday is the only day she works at Crimpers Too.

"I think we need to reach out to students, like handing out cards with food purchases, putting up posters so everyone can see it," Hall said. She also said coming to Crimpers Too in the Union is more convenient for students because they do not have to worry about finding a parking spot and it is affordable.

Crimpers Too also is convenient, not only for students who don't want to struggle for a parking spot, but for out-of-state students or students who don't always get the opportunity to go home.

"It's more convenient to go here. When I went, it was an emergency-type thing because I didn't have time to go home," said Anna Gibson, sophomore in pre-psychology and one of Hall's customers. "Taisha was good. I liked her."

Candidates question each others' stances as election nears

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH, Pa. – Democratic Sen. Barack Obama on Monday questioned rival Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton's opposition to free-trade agreements that some voters contend have eliminated thousands of U.S. jobs and mocked her weekend visit to an Indiana bar as pandering to the working class.

"Around election time, the candidates can't do enough for you. They'll promise you anything, give you a long list of proposals and even come around, with TV crews in tow, to throw back a shot and a beer," Obama told a meeting of the Alliance for American Manufacturing.

Clinton did just that at a stop Saturday at Bronko's restaurant in Crown Point, Ind.

The two presidential candidates continued to hammer each other Monday after a weekend of criticism stemming from Obama's comment that some small-town voters are bitter over their economic circumstances and "cling to guns and religion" as a result. Obama uttered the words at a private fundraiser in San Francisco last week and Clinton has seized on them in seeking the edge in Pennsylvania, which holds its primary April 22.

Obama also chided Clinton over NAFTA and the Colombian trade deal. Clinton has criticized NAFTA, which was passed under her husband's watch. She opposes the Colombian trade deal even though former President Clinton supports it and her top campaign strategist, Mark Penn, met with Colombian officials to help push for its passage. Penn has since been demoted.

"Here's what you can't do. You can't spend the better part of two decades campaigning for NAFTA and PNTR for China, and then come here to Pennsylvania, and tell the steelworkers you've been with them all along," Obama said. "You can't say you are opposed to the Colombia Trade deal, while your key strategist is working for the Colombian government to get the deal passed."

In response, Clinton spokesman Phil Singer said, "Senator Obama's speeches won't hide his condescending views of Americans living in small towns."

Addressing the gathering later Monday, Clinton said her husband made mistakes related to NAFTA but that she planned to fix them. Clinton said she would either address the NAFTA problems leading to job losses, or would tell Canada and Mexico that the United States is pulling out of the agreement.

Both candidates are hoping to secure the endorsement of the influential United Steelworkers union, which backed Democrat John Edwards before he dropped out of the race. Steelworkers president Leo Gerard introduced Obama to the crowd, saying, "We're tired, we're frustrated, we're angry and we need somebody who's going to stand up for fair trade."

Campaigning Sunday in Pennsylvania, Clinton derided Obama's comments about small-town voters as "elitist and divisive" and suggested they could doom Democrats' chances for recapturing the White House in November if Obama were the nominee.

At a union hall outside Harrisburg, Obama said he'd expected blowback from GOP nominee-in-waiting John McCain but said he'd been "a little disappointed" to be criticized by Clinton. "Shame on her," he said.

An aggravated battery led to a K-State student being severely burned, according to Riley County Police reports.

Lt. Kurt Moldrup said the RCPD received a report from Mercy Regional Health Center at about 1 a.m. Sunday of a patient with third-degrees burns caused from the patient's clothing being lit on fire.

Moldrup said a suspect lit the victim's pants on fire as a prank while the victim was asleep in his residence. The suspect and victim are both members of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, 2021 College View Road, which is where the incident occurred.

The victim was treated for burns on the back of his left leg.

Moldrup said the incident is still under investigation.

MUSIC REVIEW

Gnarls Barkley not quite as 'Crazy' now

"The Odd Couple"

Review by Mark Sibilla

In 2006, Gnarls Barkley drove the world insane with its hit single "Crazy." The subsequent album, "St. Elsewhere" went multiplatinum and proved a pairing between the talented minds of prolific producer Danger Mouse and gospel-trained singer-turned-rapper Cee-Lo Green was a very good idea. Now, two years later, the duo has released its second album, "The Odd Couple" in an attempt to try and prove that the frenzied brilliance of "St. Elsewhere" wasn't more than just a flash-in-the-pan.

The single, "Crazy" is probably the quintessential Gnarls Barkley moment. Interspersed among the song's bouncy, soulful groove were Cee-Lo's peculiar lyrics about the pleasures of insanity. After listening to both albums from Gnarls Barkley, as a psychology major, my diagnosis is an acute case of Bipolar Disorder.

"St. Elsewhere" is definitely the manic side of the duo's personality. The album was a kaleidoscope of styles and sounds, and Cee-Lo was at his most possessed, slyly creeping in and out of personas between songs making for an exhilarating listen that was all over the map.

"The Odd Couple," then, would be Gnarls Barkley's depressive side. That isn't to say the album is a dreary affair, but its sound is much more focused on creating a mellow atmosphere, and the lyrics are gloomier and more inwardly focused than on its predecessor.

This is immediately apparent on album opener, "Charity Case." Instead of the blaring, attention-grabbing horns from "Go-Go Gadget Gospel" (from "St. Elsewhere"), "Charity Case" rolls in on a smooth bass line and clanging high-hat cymbals. Cee-Lo's lyrics are filled with lament and self-pity: "How are ya/I think I can help/But I can't help myself." Later he bemoans "even my shadow leaves me all alone at night."

Instead of riding the momentum created by "Charity Case," Gnarls Barkley opts to slow it down with the amazing Al Green-meets-trip-hop of "Who's Gonna Save My Soul." Cee-Lo movingly pleads for someone to help him with his depression where even bad news makes his day. The production by Danger Mouse is impeccable with its druggy, distorted slow-motion funk groove.

Even the more upbeat songs contain elements of Cee-Lo's newfound cynicism. On lead single "Run," Cee-Lo professes, "You can't win, child/ We've all tried to/You've been lied to" over a staccato funk rhythm that is always on the verge of running out of control.

Album highlight "Surprise" is sweet '60s pop turned sour. The disparity between the sunny, hand-clapping, toe-tapping production and Cee-Lo's pessimistic attitude creates a brilliant emotional tension. Cee-Lo intones his frustration with relationships, life and the duality of human nature. Ultimately, his message in the song is that everything is ephemeral, and he tells his listeners, "When all you need is to be met half way but nobody tries, don't be surprised."

Chinese specialty meal features handmade dishes

The way to a man's heart might be through his stomach, but dim sum is more of a straight shot.

According to food-timeline.org, the traditional Chinese cuisine dim sum – meaning "to touch your heart" – consists of a wide range of light dishes that constitute a mid-morning meal or brunch. The dishes are usually served in a small steamer basket or on a little plate.

Dim sum originated in Canton – near Hong Kong – in China. It made its way to the U.S. with Chinese immigrants, silently gaining a foothold on both the east and west coasts of the country, according to the site.

Ruby Fang, Manhattan resident and waitress at Manhattan's Happy Valley Chinese Restaurant, said dim sum is still very popular in Hong Kong and has been increasing in familiarity in the U.S. over the last few years.

"Dim sum is a specialty; we make it fresh, only on Sundays," she said. "It is very popular, and we usually sell a lot of it."

Fang also said each dim sum dish is carefully put together by hand and each ingredients are strategically selected to create the perfect flavor.

Originally made with organic ingredients like flower petals, dim sum is now made in all types of food genres from seafood delicacies to sweet desserts. Fang said. She also said Happy Valley customers can choose from a list of more than 30 dim sum dishes, and most tables often order one or two dishes per person and then all share the food, round-robin style.

We recently paid a visit to Happy Valley – located on Laramie Street next to Stray Cat Tattoo in Aggieville – to sample some dim sum menu items. The local Chinese restaurant featured affordable prices, friendly service and, of course, handmade dim sum only available on Sundays.

All dishes ordered were either $1.95 or $2.95.

COLUMNISTS DIDN'T AGREE ON EVERY DISH:

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

SHU MAI

Fang said this is the most popular dish, and it's not difficult to see why. Shu mai is basically a won ton filled with different types of meat. The best part about the dish was its flavor: There were different tastes and textures that all come together to make for an interesting eating experience.

CHERRY PORRIDGE

I'm not sure what normal porridge tastes like, but if it's anything like this, I don't want any part of it.

It wasn't that it tasted badly, it just didn't have much of a taste.

It was rice, beans, bits of cherries and a broth all combined, yet no flavor. It was like eating warm water with a little bit of texture. This was one of the weirdest foods I've ever eaten.

LEEK-FILLED PASTRIES

Eric: While the porridge was weird, the leek dish was one of the grossest foods I've ever eaten. As soon as I took a bite and chewed for a few seconds, my napkin was in front of my face catching the food being spit from my mouth.

Hannah: I couldn't hardly believe it when Eric spit out his first bite of this dish – I thought it was delicious. The soft, doughy outer shell was a nice contrast to the sweet-onion flavored bits of leeks and paste filling. The texture was appealing, and the flavor was just right.

SALAD WITH SPINACH

Eric: If I hadn't ordered the shu mai, the spinach salad would have been my favorite dish. It was basically slimy spinach mixed with shredded carrots and onion slices. I know when people hear food is slimy, they automatically think it's gross, but this wasn't. In fact, it was delicious. If I ever eat dim sum again, I am defiantly going to order this salad.

Hannah: I'm not a fan of cooked spinach in general, and this salad reaffirmed my distaste for spinach dishes. I tried not to judge the limp greens by their texture, but even after I let the first bite's taste settle in, I was not impressed. The rest of the cooked vegetables in the dish were either completely flavorless or had a rank, unpleasant taste that made them difficult to swallow.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

SALAD WITH STARCH NOODLES

It took me a few bites to adjust to the texture of the salad's slimy noodles, but once the crisp flavor set it, I was hooked. Not only did the fresh-tasting, translucent noodles make for fork-twirling adventure, but they deliciously complimented the bits of greens and carrots that were mixed in. However, my favorite part of this salad was the that provided the perfect hint of flavor to the dish.

SESAME SEED BALLS:

My taste buds immediately took a liking to these tiny dim sum treats, which had both salty and sugary appeal. From the outside, the bite-size desserts, about one-and-a-half-inch thick each, appear to be simply pastry-like balls coated in sesame seeds. But with just one bite into the light orb, I was delighted to find the ball was hollow and airy, yet enhanced with a small amount of a fruity, jam-like filling.

Recent U.S. religion survey shows decline of Protestant population

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An extensive new survey by the Pew Forum on Religion & Public Life details the religious affiliation of the American public and explores the shifts taking place in the U.S. religious landscape. The data is based on interviews with more than 35,000 Americans age 18 and older.

For centuries, religion has operated as the backbone of many societies. The number of individuals in religious practices has remained constant and strong. Recently, however, the Protestant religion has found itself short in number as members continue to unaffiliate themselves with any belief of organized religion.

Though the exact reason for the steady decrease in Protestant numbers over the past several years is unknown, figures from the National Opinion Research Center in Chicago show that as the Protestant population decreases, the number of those unaffiliated with a religion increases.

A United States Religious Landscape survey conducted by the Pew Forum, an online religious news source, reported that barely 51 percent of the Christian population has remained Protestant in 2008, compared to the two-thirds majority of the mid-1980s.

Churches in the Manhattan area, however, have not reported any such pattern. The Manhattan Church of Christ reported that the church's studies indicate steady attendance over the past few years, as does the First Assembly of God.

"I cannot draw a correlation to the general decline of the Protestant population in the United States," said Ed Walker, senior pastor of First Assembly of God. "Any increase or decrease anymore in Manhattan has to do with the military and college life. We have people transitioning out and transitioning in."

Jason Coorts, coordinator of Campus Crusade for Christ, said he believes that because K-State is located in Manhattan, it creates a skewed perception of religious numbers in the area.

"It is somewhat skewed here just because there's always an influx of students coming into Manhattan that are looking for a church," he said. "What I do find is that a lot of students I talk to on campus that have grown up with a church background aren't doing anything right now."

Walker said he could not put his finger on an exact reason for the decline across the nation, but he did say it was a cultural shift. Though the media does steer the direction of U.S. culture, Walker said it would be too easy to blame the media.

"I think we historically see the young adults leave the church and then they get married and have kids and come back, and we just aren't seeing that," he said. "I think people are seeing the church as less relevant in their lives."

Another study conducted by UCLA, however, indicates that students actually become more spiritual in college though they might not necessarily attend religious assemblies. According to the longitudinal study, the overall level of spirituality, as defined by the researchers, increases between an undergraduate's freshman and junior years.

Coorts agreed with this indication. Coorts said that a majority of students are not lacking the spirituality of religion but do not necessarily agree to its organization.

"This is a classic quote I hear from students on campus: 'I believe in God, but I don't believe in organized religion.' I believe there's as much spiritual interest as there has ever been in students," Coorts said. "I don't see a decrease in spiritual interest as much as a decrease in being part of a church."

Rather than looking to a church or particular denomination for guidance, students are seeking new ways to harness spirituality.

"A large number of students are really pursuing God and pursuing Christianity, for good or for bad, apart from what is known as the traditional church," Coorts said. "You can see that today in that Navigators [a campus group] has 500 students, but you don't necessarily see them in church on Sundays."

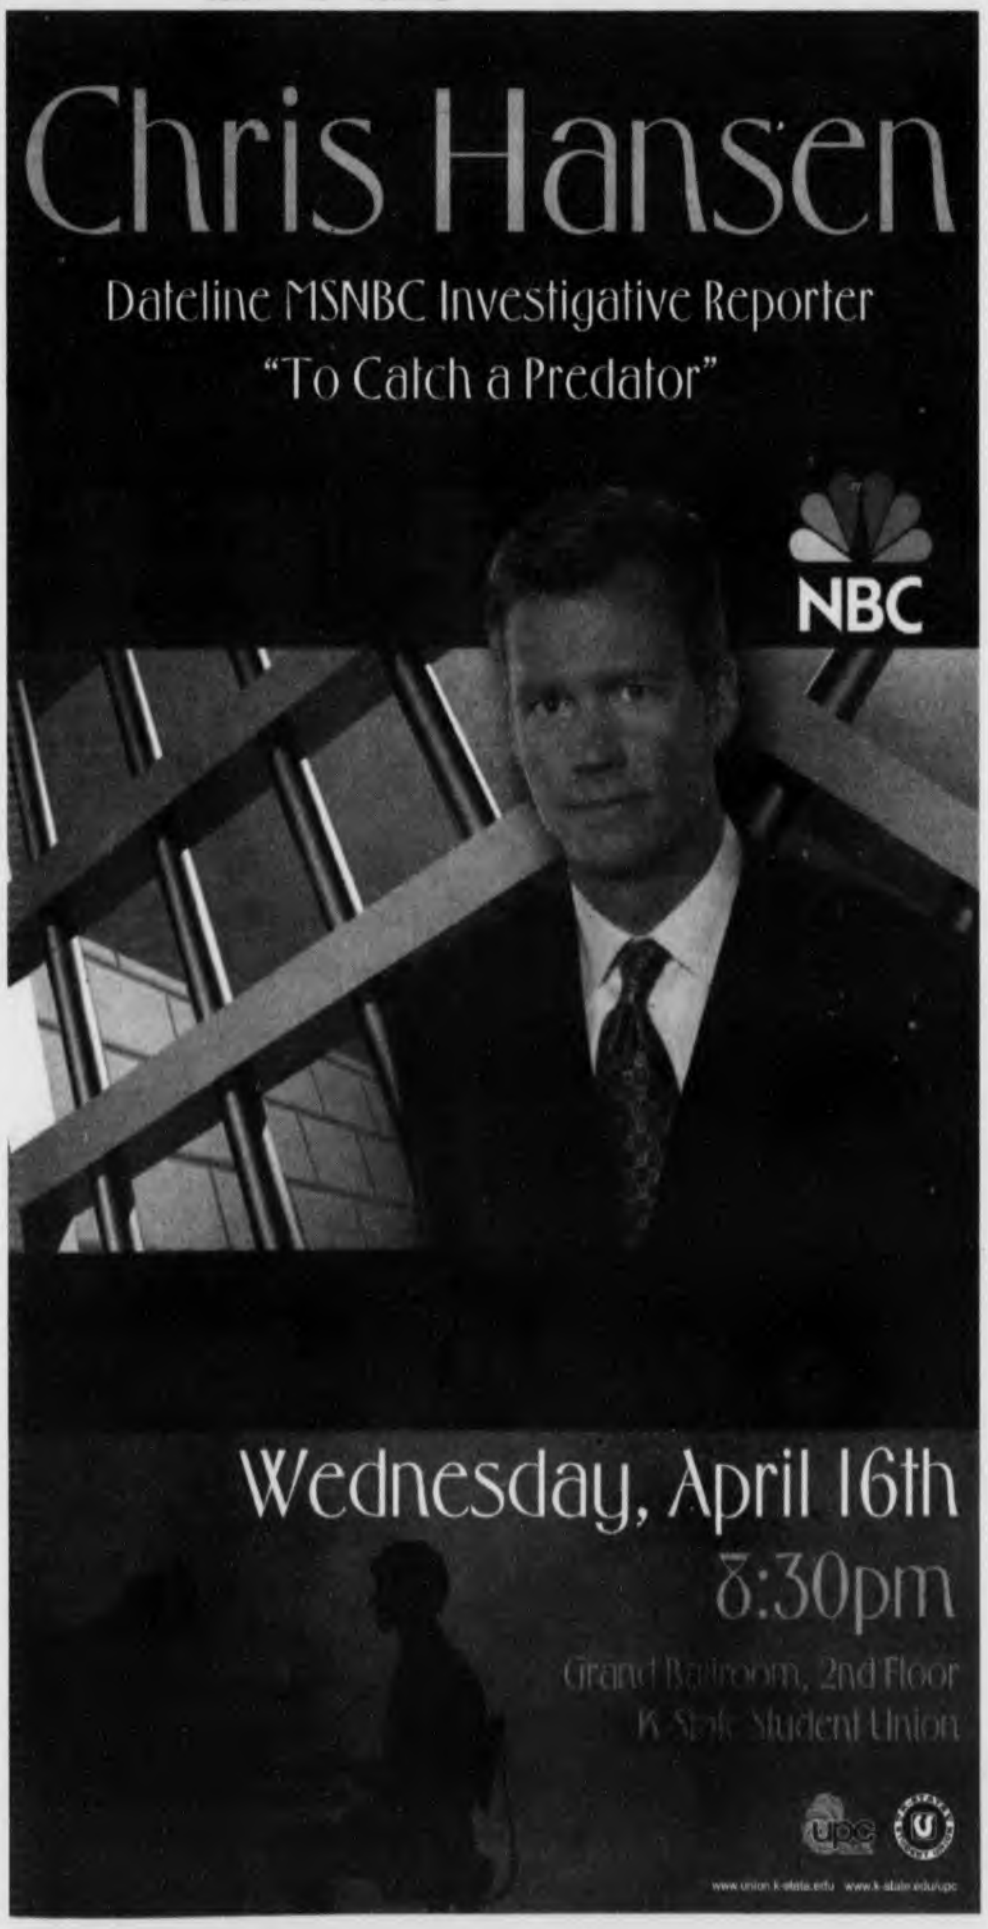
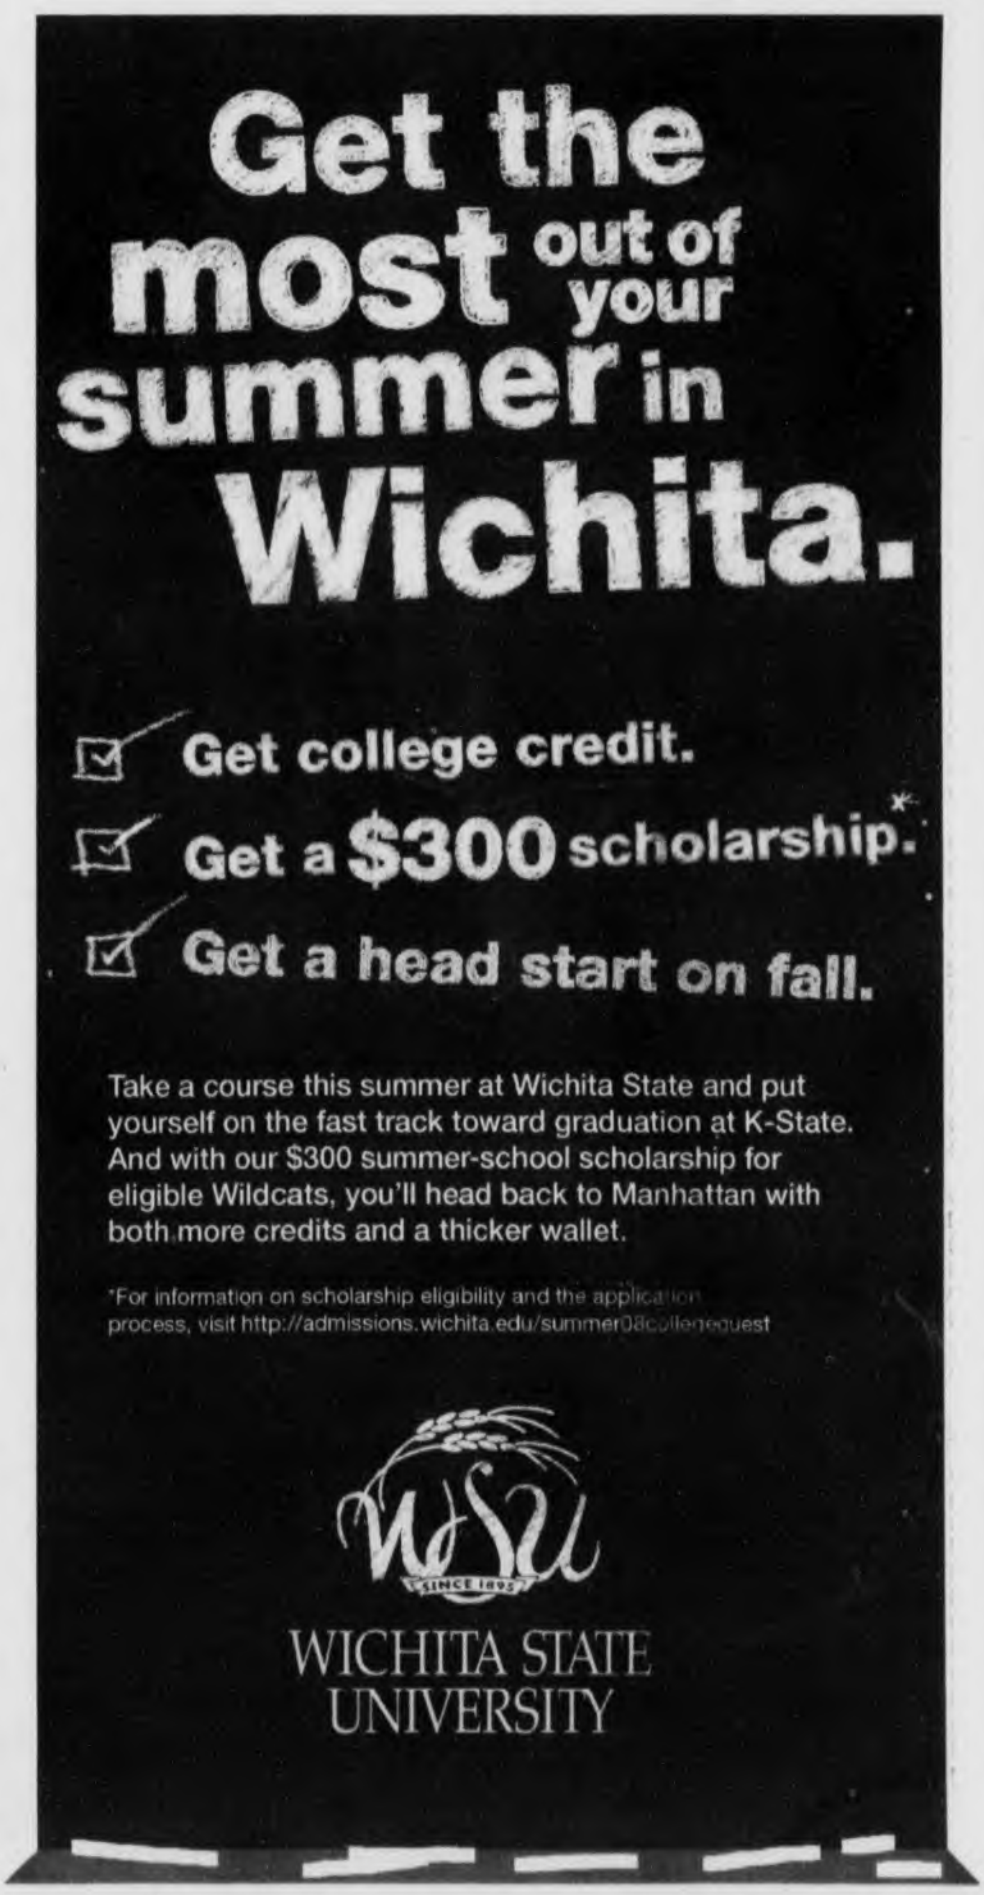
Panel to discuss government jobs



By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN



K-State's Career and Employment Services will give a presentation on the opportunities of working in the government at 4 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union room 213. The presentation will address what kinds of job opportunities exist at the county, state and federal levels of government.

"It will be a panel discussion with three or four representatives from government agencies," said Katie Wessel, graduate assistant at CES. "It appeals to students from all majors, and we are expecting probably around 50 people this year."

Representatives from the U.S. Secret Service, Kansas Department of Transportation, Social Security Administration and Shawnee County Department of Corrections will serve on a panel that will answer students' questions. They will give an overview of what their jobs entail, describe the jobs they hire for and explain how students can prepare to apply. According to the Secret Service Web site, they are looking for highly qualified men and women from diverse backgrounds who desire fast-paced, exciting and challenging careers.

"It is a great opportunity to prepare for government jobs and find out how the application process is a little bit different and what experiences government employers are looking for," Wessel said.

timing on fundraising and bond issues. In talking with people within the department, coaches, student-athletes, staff, as well as people outside the department, we're really looking at what it takes to turn it up a notch. We're at that point where we need to be looking at what it takes to turn it up a notch. We're at that point where we need to be looking to compete consistently for championships. That really is that next move for the institution.

Externally, to make contacts with our key alumni. We have a meeting coming up with our steering committee for the Wildcat Victory campaign, which is part of that fundraising for the facilities expansion. This weekend is a phenomenal opportunity in terms of our auction, spring football, Fan Fest – all of that. It provides an opportunity. Part of retaining the vice president responsibility is trying to do a better job of coordinating our activities with the athletics and seeing where we can leverage each other's strength.

Whether it's integrated marketing or closer ties with alumni and foundation and capitalizing on a very strong base and looking at how we move forward, it takes the entire K-State family for us to move to this next level. Once we answer that next question about whether everyone is on board for that next level, then it takes everybody. Everybody - students, faculty, staff, alumni, athletes, coaches. Everybody.

What did you learn about being an athletic director from Tim Weiser?

Tim and I worked very closely together. Tim did a great job of providing financial stability, hiring excellent staff, and I think with Tim, I really learned from him the value of the type of networking that needs to be done in order to move forward.

What is your favorite thing about being integrated into the athletics department?

Thus far, it's really, for me – bringing full-circle some divisions that go back to when President Wefald first got here and his goals for having us be the best institution that we could become – to bring passion to our work and a sense of urgency and to take care of business immediately. Being immersed in athletics rekindles that.

You can't help but to have that feeling of passion for K-State and understand that so many people that support K-State that want the very best for their alma mater or their institution, if they're students. To see the young student-athletes who have that opportunity to compete at that level is really exciting.

Where do you see the K-State athletics program going in the next five years?

In five years, we'd like to say that we've provided the best facilities as well as the financial strength to really compete and have the financial strength to really compete and to have a chance to compete for championships. Our fans have had a taste of that. I hope in five years, we are stronger than we are now and that everybody that comes in that program has a goal.

How do you balance your administrative position with the athletics director position?

Part of it is looking for the synergy and where we can leverage.

I've had to shift some of my priorities, but I can do that because I have great staff.

They all do an outstanding job. I've talked with each one of them, and they understand the limits on my time.

It's going to be a stretch. We all go into it understanding that we're going to work some long hours, and we've made a commitment. So far, everybody that I work with is up for it, excited about it and sees the relationship to the success within their own units as well.

However, not all the songs are filled with Cee-Lo's dour look on life. "Blind Mary" is bright "Sgt. Pepper"-inspired pop filled with Cee-Lo gushing about his new blind girlfriend. The song is filled with goofily enthralling lines like, "She's my friend, she doesn't judge me/She doesn't even know I'm ugly/So I've absolutely nothing to hide/Cause I'm so much prettier inside." It's perhaps the album's most charming moment.

Ultimately, with "The Odd Couple," Gnarls Barkley has produced an album that is every bit as exhilarating and compulsively listenable as its debut. Though those looking for the second coming of "Crazy" will be disappointed, anyone else who gives the album a chance will find an emotionally honest album running a gamut of sounds that reveals more and becomes more satisfying with each listen.

portable station where people can go to get fresh water and cool off using filtered rainwater. Not only is it great for disaster sites, Bowne said, the cube is appropriate for any occasion or event where water is needed, like in army deployments or summer music festivals.

Though Greensburg no longer has a desperate need for fresh water, he said it still will be used as a public water station in areas like parks and fairgrounds "so that people rebuilding the town can get drinking water and use the myster."

The Litter Box, though not part of the G-cubed project to be completed next month, will be constructed and completed by architecture student volunteers in the summer intercession class, Bowne said. The cube is a portable bathroom that demonstrates low-water use sinks and showers as well as a composting toilet with water reclamation systems.

"It's meant to show how citizens can use plumbing fixtures that don't have such an environmental pull," Bowne said.

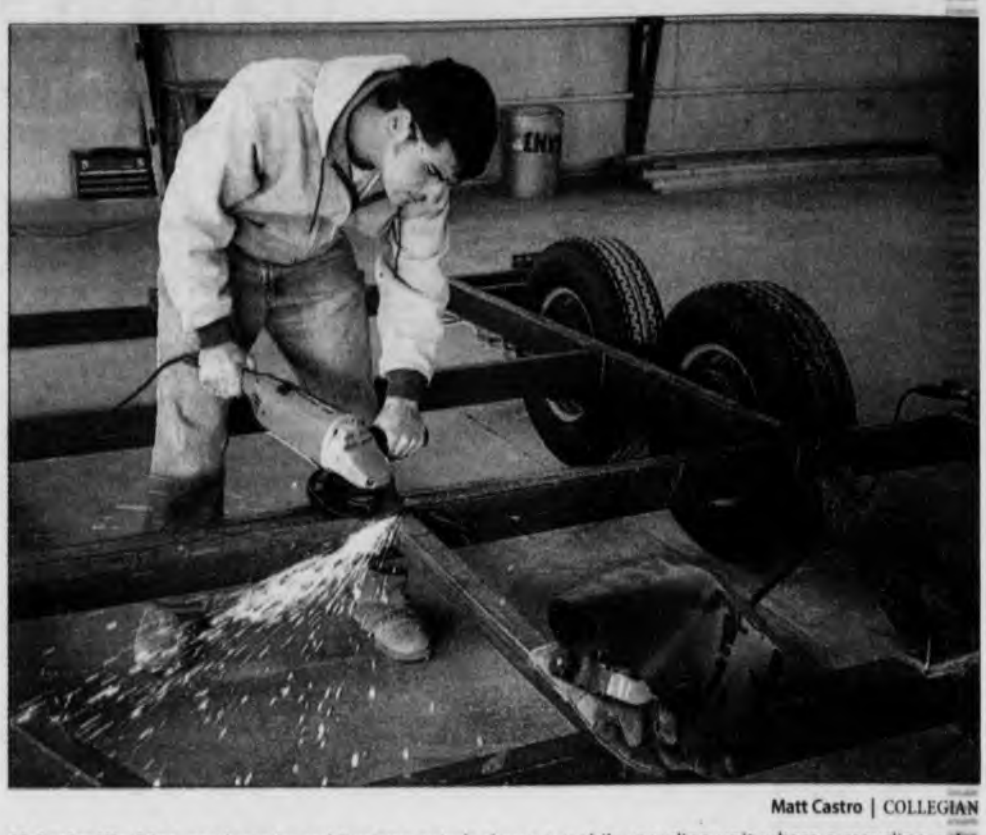
THE INSPIRATION

In the fall, Vanderpool said the students working on G-cubed completed their first sustainable project – a solar house – and entered it in an architectural competition in Washington, D.C.

"After that, we'd been talking about wanting to do another design-build project, but we didn't know what it was going to be," Vanderpool said. "But then, it just kind of clicked that it should obviously be something in Greensburg. It's for people in Kansas, so it just kind of fit."

Though the students learned a lot from the solar house project, Andy Becker, fifth-year student in architecture, said each student has a lot more stock in the Greensburg project.

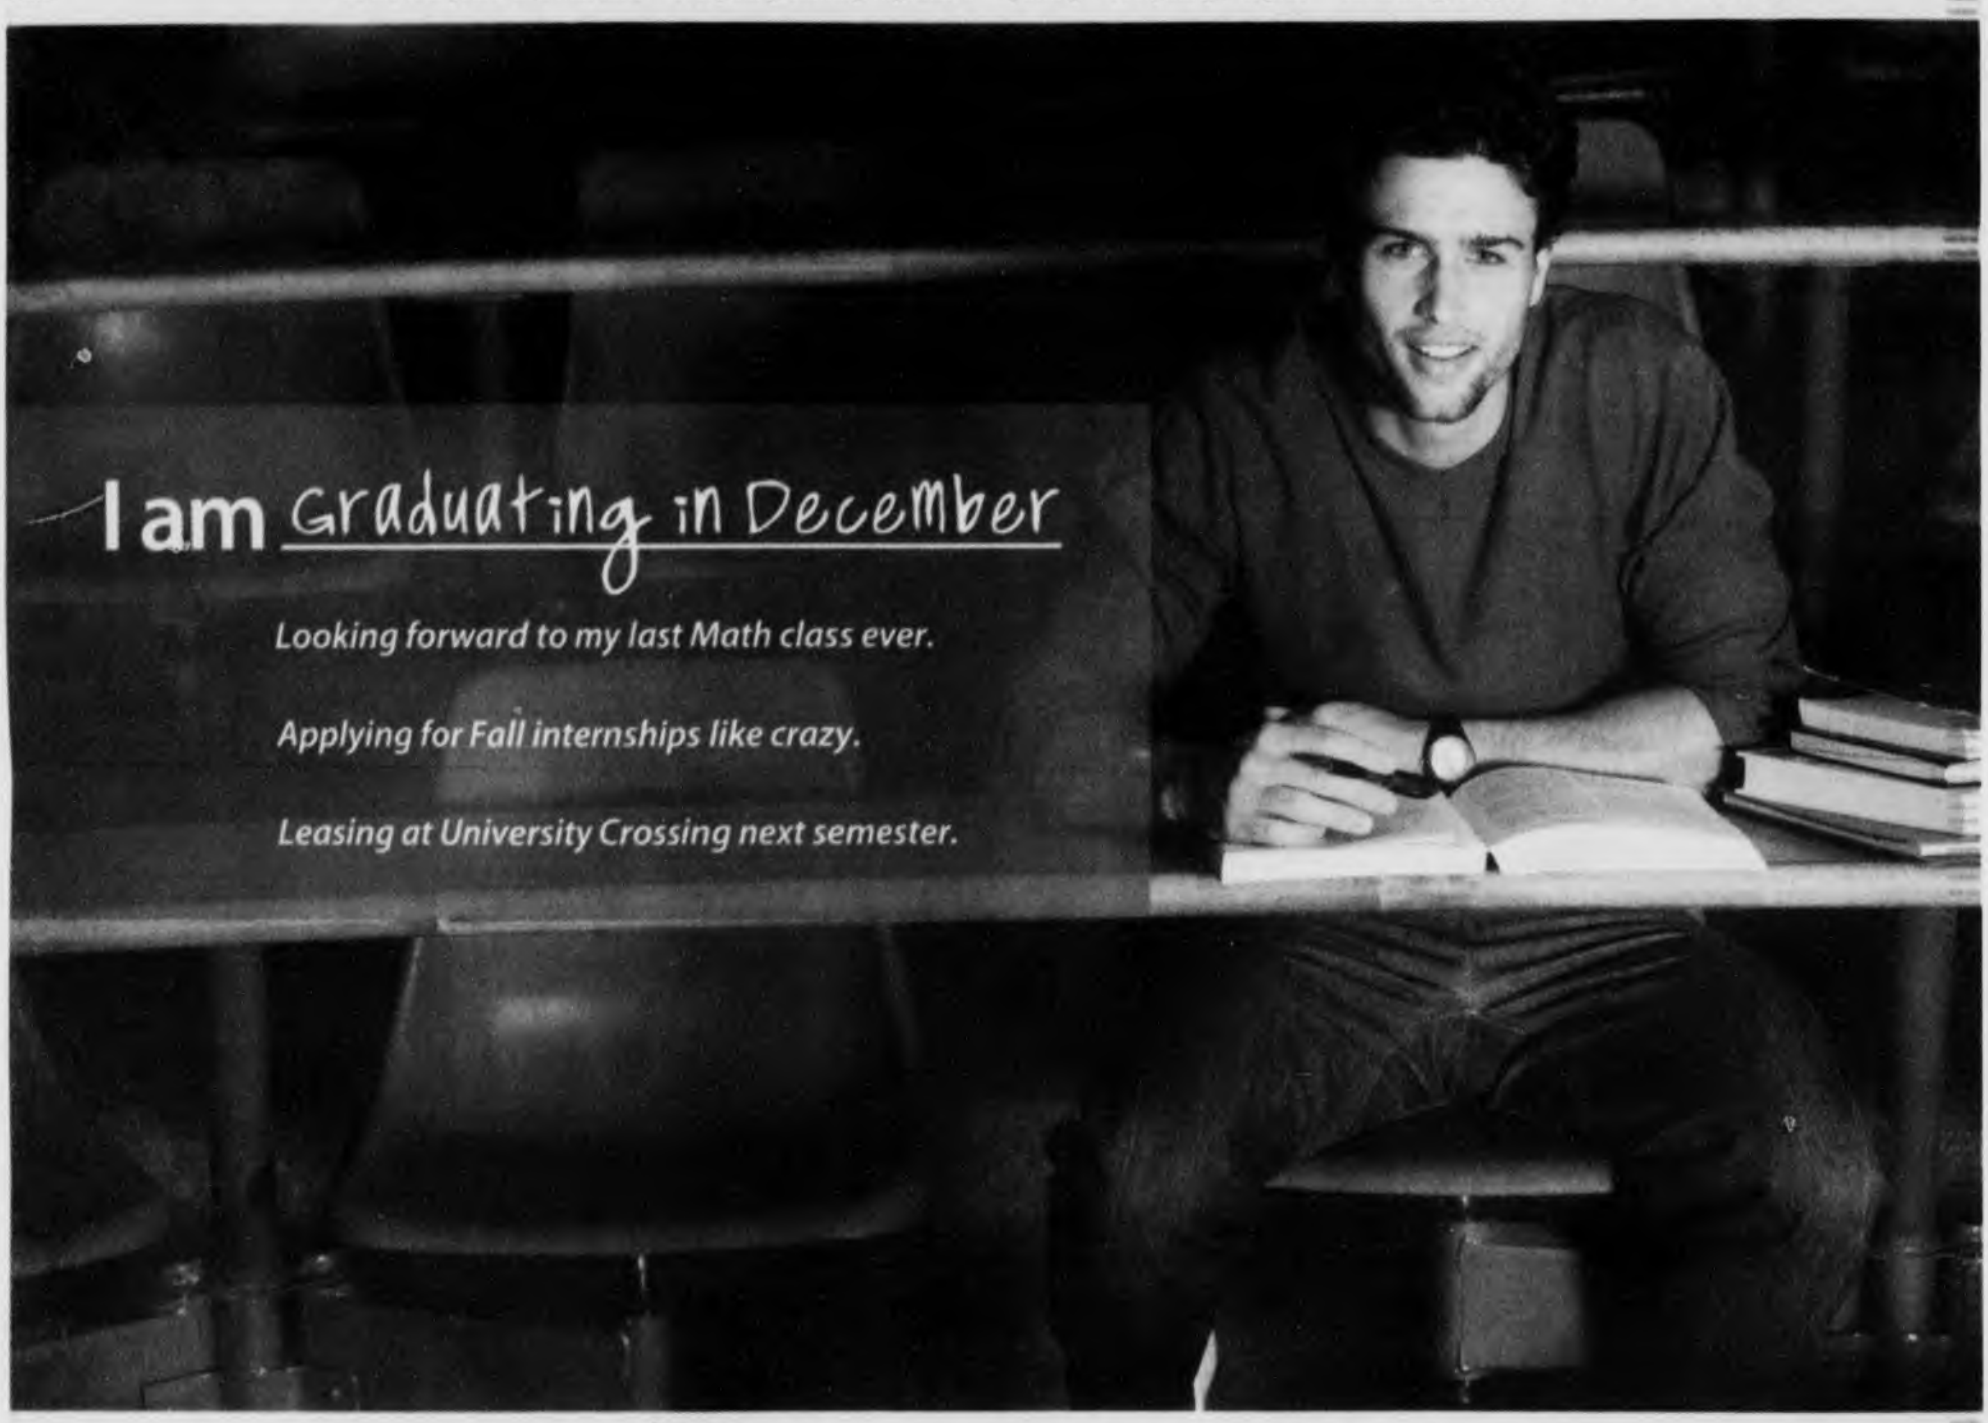
"We were able to design [the cubes] from the beginning, and it's a project of our own, whereas with the solar house, we were taking over from the last group," he said.



Another difference between the two projects is time. G-cubed is operating on a much smaller time scale – a single semester – while the solar house project was allocated for two years. But that time crunch has not put a damper on the project or the students' spirits.

"One of the most exciting things is that normally, a project like this might take somewhere from eight months to a year," Becker said. "But we've been able to supersede the process a little bit, compress everything down and really work at a pace that allows us to do everything from start to finish this spring semester."

Becker said the project has been "fantastic" and the perfect mix of what he's been wanting through the architecture school. Where architecture students are typically confined to computers, these students are getting hands-on experience.



"It's got all the elements that you will need in real life to succeed as an architect – coming from the design phase to conceptually understanding what it is that's appropriate to do, what you want to do, and what would be exciting to do, and flushing out details through construction documents and structural calculations," he said, "which is where we're at now – construction.

"It's really fulfilling to see everything coming together ... We're out here in the shop, putting everything together and getting ready to make something happen in reality for this town in Greensburg. It's pretty great."

New leadership building to break ground Friday

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Soon K-State will have one of only two buildings in the nation completely devoted to the study of leadership. The program that began nearly 11 years ago with a mere 12 students now has more than 1,400 students enrolled and continues to grow, said Bob Shoop, senior scholar of leadership studies.

Susan Scott, director of leadership studies and programs, said prior to the existence of an actual leadership program, Pat Bosco, K-State associate vice president, led leadership workshops in the 1980s, and these workshops eventually became classes.

"By 1996, we had such student interest in those classes that we asked if students would like to take a minor and 60 out of 70 students said they would," Scott said. "We needed to find an academic home for the minor and that was the College of Education and that's how we began."

The program was approved by the Kansas Board of Regents March 3, 1997, and has been housed across from the main campus on Manhattan Avenue. The two brick houses serve as the only physical buildings for the leadership program at K-State.

This, however, will soon change as the Office of Leadership Studies and Programs will be host to a groundbreaking ceremony oat 3 p.m. on April 18 in the parking lot across from Shellenberger Hall.

"We operate out of two small houses that we rent and we have three faculty to a basement," Scott said. "Just having regular faculty space will be in and of itself an important aspect of the building. We don't have enough space for teaching or for faculty. We're scattered across the campus and have far less than ideal conditions."

With an ever-growing program, the leadership studies department worked with the KSU Foundation to develop a system of fundraising that would allow for the creation of a new workspace.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

These two brick buildings serve as the centers for the Office of Leadership Studies and Programs. They will be replaced within the next few years by a new, larger building, which will be located across from Shellenberger Hall and is shown in the above artist renderings.

"There wasn't a real fundraising effort until we started talking about a building for leadership studies – that's when we started as a foundation to start raising money for leadership studies," said Mike Smith, vice president for development at the Foundation. "The contributions for the leadership studies building are critical for the future growth of this important program on the K-State campus. They needed a home that was representative of the number of students who value the importance of leadership."

As the new structure begins to take shape, both Scott and Shoop said they hope to see more students join the leadership studies program as it develops and matures with the new building.

"We believe in the philosophy of constant improvement, so we're always looking for new programs to add, new classes to add, the re-evaluation of classes and programs we

Former VT student, paper adviser remember shootings 1 year later

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

As part of a candlelight vigil on April 18, 2007, in Bosco Student Plaza, K-State students Ann Virgo and Nikki Davies take part in a moment of silence in remembrance of those killed at the Virginia Tech shootings.

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One year ago today, 32 Virginia Tech students were shot and killed by a troubled student who shot himself after two separate shootings on campus.

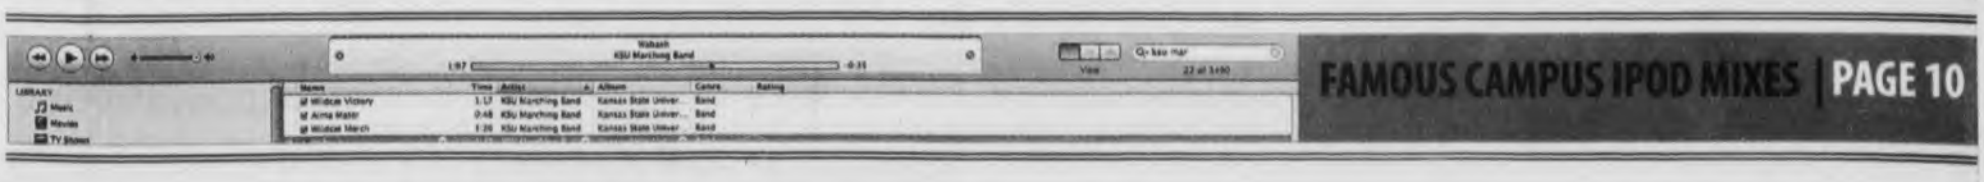
Since that incident, campuses across the country have examined their security situations and taken safety measures like banning guns on campus and installing alert systems to warn students of situations like shootings. These efforts were addressed again after the shootings at Northern Illinois University on Feb. 14.

OVERCOMING ADVERSITY

The adviser for the Virginia Tech student newspaper and a former Virginia Tech student said though they are glad universities are learning from the incidents, people in the Blacksburg, Va., community and the university still lead "normal" lives.

"In a lot of ways, I think the university is still very, very much looking for normalcy, and we still cheer at football games and basketball games," said Kelly Furnas, Collegiate Times adviser and K-State alumnus. "We still go to class – everything you would expect to be normal."

Furnas said certain events and noises trigger memories of the shootings for him and other members of the community. He said people are more aware of their surroundings and take more precautions that they might not have taken before the incident.



"We don't necessarily assume the worse, but we panic a little bit more, I guess," he said.

Aisha Salazar, 2004 Virginia Tech graduate and graduate student in food science at K-State, has several friends that were at Virginia Teach during the shootings and knew some of the victims. She said people are sometimes reticent to talk about the shootings, but most have tried to "put their lives back together and continue" going to work and classes.

"For some people it's still a sensitive issue, and other people have said 'OK, that happens, that doesn't define our school,'" Salazar said.

Both Salazar and Furnas said they have sometimes

'To Catch a Predator' host to speak today

Hansen

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Chris Hansen, NBC news anchor and host of the NBC show "To Catch a Predator," will speak at 8:30 tonight in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

During "To Catch a Predator," Hansen uses fake e-mail addresses and screen names to lure people who have expressed plans to exploit underage teens into a meeting. Once at the house, Hansen and a news crew appear and begin to interview the adult.

The show generally features adult men who believe they are meeting underage girls to have sex.

Some of Hansen's catch phrase's include, "Why don't you have a seat?" and "You can leave at any time."

The show has generated controversy in the past, and critics have accused Hansen and NBC of sensational journalism.

The Union Program Council will sponsor the program, and Chris Jones, sophomore in biochemistry, microbiology and pre-med, was one of the people who helped bring Hansen to K-State.

Once UPC learned Hansen was available, it contacted his agent and took steps to get him here.

Jones said one of the attractive aspects of Hansen's event involved the controversy created by the show.

"We thought it would be a cool thing to do because of the controversy the show has generated recently," he said.

Jones also said the work Hansen has done helped generate interest.

Jones was not sure what the topics of Hansen's talk might include, but did say the points would surround the topics of the show.

"[He will speak] some about the show, some about the issues related; you know, child pornography, et-cetera," he said.

Event lets students rally for awareness

The annual Take Back the Night peace march will give students a chance to participate in a real movement, rather than just learning about historical ones in class, said the event coordinator.

The rally, sponsored by Ordinary Women, will start at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in the K-State "quad" between Waters Hall and Hale Library and end at 10 p.m. in City Park. The march's purpose is to shed a light on the danger women face when walking outside in the dark.

"It's a symbolic march and rally to raise awareness about violence against women around the world," said Kate Boysen, president of Ordinary Women and senior in Spanish and sociology. "It's also to promote a hopeful message about change."

Only women can march, but men can support them from the sidelines as they begin and end their journey from the K-State campus to City Park, where everyone can listen to speeches and musical performances.

Boysen said local musicians Fashionable Late and Jessie Freyermuth will perform, and there will also be a poetry reading.

According to a Collegian article covering the event in 2007, more than 100 women participated in the march.

"We all have the same hope, the same message, and the same desire to come together to create a sense of community," Boysen said.

TO THE POINT

VT victims should be honored

Today is the one-year anniversary of the shootings at Virginia Tech. The university canceled class so students and faculty could mourn the losses.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

We at K-State should remember the shootings and how we came together. After the shootings, students attended candlelight vigils and memorials, joined memorial Facebook groups, and wore maroon and orange to remember Virginia Tech.

No events have been scheduled by K-State, and nobody has posted on those groups' walls for months.

Students put their busy schedules aside and were eager to show support for the victims a year ago, and they should at least remember how the community came together to mourn and also learn from the shootings.

Though they are hundreds of miles apart, Virginia Tech is a similar university to K-State with many of the same degrees and programs and a similar student population. Virginia Tech is the centerpiece of Blacksburg, Va., just like K-State is to Manhattan.

Virginia Governor, Timothy Kaine has called for a statewide moment of silence at noon today. Members of the local community should take a moment of silence of their own to remember the losses and gains of shootings at a university not much different from their own.

Cutting taxes necessary to increase state business, jobs

BRETT KING

Like the seven dwarfs skipping off to work, our representatives and senators on the state and national level believe every working-age individual should be singing this all the way to the post office: "I owe, I owe, to pay my taxes I go."

Yesterday marked the day when all the good little liberal boys and girls felt joy in their hearts because the "government" received more money to pay for social programs and pork spending, but according to the Tax Foundation, many citizens will continue to pay even after taxes are due.

According to the Tax Foundation Web site, this year's Tax Freedom Day is April 23. Tax Freedom Day is the day each year, determined by research done by the Tax Foundation, when taxpayers cease to pay taxes and start making money. For this year, the average taxpayer must work from Jan. 1 until April 23 to pay all the tax accumulated in one year. After four and a half months, taxpayers are able to claim the money they earned belongs to them.

On a state level, Kansas has the ability to celebrate its Tax Freedom Day a little earlier than the national date, as ours is Friday.

Rising tax rates in Kansas have made it one of the most highly taxed states in the Midwest. The citizens of Kansas are not getting any help from either the federal or state governments.

On the federal level, senators and representatives have failed to extend the Bush tax cuts and are set to let them expire soon. In a speech Monday night at the K-State Student Union, Kansas Secretary of State Ron Thornburgh explained if the tax cuts are allowed to expire, it would be the largest tax increase our country has seen. He went on to say the average Kansas family's taxes would increase by at least $3,000.

The state government has not worked any better for the citizens of Kansas. The Republicans in this state control both the House and the Senate yet are not able to curb the spending problems of this state. All of the government projects sponsored by the Republicans have increased the need for more tax dollars across the state.

Unfortunately our state needs more tax dollars, but we do not have the ability to bring in more tax revenue without going after the rapidly aging population of Kansas. It isn't rocket science – if states want to increase tax revenue they need to make the infrastructure and tax rates attractive to business. An increase in jobs encourages people to stay in their respective areas and also increases population.

The Republicans are at fault in this state for allowing the spending and the size of government to grow out of control, but the Democrats are not coming up with any better solutions.

Local Kansas representative Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said at the Economic Honors Banquet in the Union on April 4 that entertainment is the key to keeping kids from moving out of the state. She could have been joking, but her idea to build another NASCAR track in western Kansas was absolutely ridiculous.

The movie "Field of Dreams" is correct: "If you build it, they will come." If Republicans in the state government are able to find an effective solution to decrease our personal, property and corporate tax rates, the businesses will come. Businesses create jobs and creating them is a much more successful way of raising money for this state.

Media mogul Ted Turner shows exemplary hypocrisy

GRADY BOLDING

One of my favorite factors of this world in which we live is its' elitists. From multi-millionaires to larger-than-life figures, they always find some way to interject their opinions on our ways of life. It's even better when they have enough prestige to burn their names into history because of their "humble" contributions.

For instance, in recent days, multi-millionaire media mogul, philanthropist and environmentalist, Ted Turner, stated his opinion on the whole issue of global warming. According to one of the articles in the April 3 edition of the Atlanta Journal-Constitution, Turner gave his opinion of the environmental threat in a PBS interview with Charlie Rose.

"It'll be eight degrees hotter in 30 or 40 years and basically none of the crops will grow," Turner said in the article. "Most of the people will have died and the rest of us will be cannibals."

I know – maybe it's an exaggeration. But it only got better from there.

"On a voluntary basis," Turner continued, "everybody in the world has got to pledge to themselves that one or two children is it."

Now my buttons are pushed.

Once again, Turner continues to spout his life philosophy while telling us "regular people" how to live. The CNN founder has been on the frontlines of many social issues, especially environmentalism, for decades now. Despite his good intentions, I have come to see the folly of Turner's ways and I am here to prove it.

As previously stated, Turner believes that a way to save the environment would be a massive decrease in the population. No idea is perfect, but how does Turner think he has the right to tell us to have one or two children when he is another media mogul with more than five digits in his bank account? Better yet, his own Web site, tedturner.com, boasts about his 10 ranches in seven states, including Kansas. All in all, the guy owns roughly 2 million acres of land.

That's right – Turner is a multi-millionaire with enough ranches to make him the biggest land owner in the United States.

Furthermore, the Huffington Post stated on Sept. 20, 2007, that Turner was interviewed for GQ magazine's 50th anniversary issue. In this interview, Turner gave us insight as to what else he does with all that money.

"I lost 80 percent of my wealth and then gave away over half of the rest. So I'm a man of modest means now," he said.

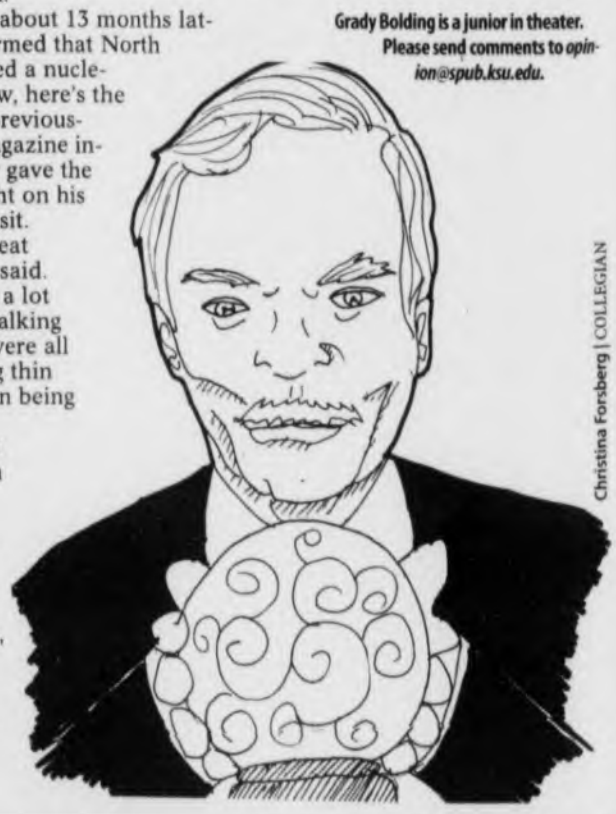
Whew. I thought he'd never come over to the light.

"But if you budget carefully and watch your expenditures," Turner continued, "you can get by on a couple billion dollars, you can squeeze by with a couple billion."

You know what – forget that I, one of many who manage to squeeze by on a couple hundred a month, said anything. However, I've saved the worst for last.

In 2005, Turner paid a visit to North Korea. On Sept. 19 that same year, he stated the following in an interview on CNN's "The Situation Room" with Wolf Blitzer.

"I am absolutely convinced that the North Koreans are absolutely sincere," Turner said. "There's really no reason for them to cheat [on nukes].... I looked them right in the eyes. And they looked like they meant the truth."



Of course, about 13 months later, it was confirmed that North Korea had tested a nuclear weapon. Now, here's the kicker. In the previously cited GQ magazine interview, Turner gave the following insight on his North Korea visit.

"I had a great time there," he said. "There weren't a lot of fat people walking around. They were all thin. And being thin is healthier than being fat."

Last time I checked, North Korea's thin people were the result of a decade-long famine. That's something "humanitarian" Turner could not comprehend if his life depended on it.

I could go on forever about this, but I'll spare everyone. Turner is just another case of a hypocritical rich mogul who tells us how to live while "getting by" on millions of dollars and supporting diabolical regimes that starve their own people. If anything, Turner should step aside and let real humanitarians like Norman Borlaug take his place.

Gov. signs bill to help military children

By David Griffin, Jr.
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius signed a bill on April 9 that could help military children who have to move constantly and have less access opportunities to get education and child care.

SEBELIUS

Representative Sydney Carlin said the need for this bill, which is called the Interstate Compact on Educational Opportunity for Military Children, stems from military children being moved from place to place and having little to no say in the move.

"What we've experienced is when military students move, their records don't follow in a timely manner," said Carlin.

The compact focuses on five major areas that work to increase the equality and educational opportunities for children in the military: enrollment, which allows state schools to accept hand-delivered educational records; eligibility in extracurricular activities; placement in the correct equivalent courses; graduation; and funding.

Aaron Vernon, junior in secondary education biology, explained his experience from being a student living in a military family. When transferring from school to school, Vernon either would be far ahead of the students at his new school or far behind and forced to play catch-up.

"Half the time I was behind, especially in math," Vernon said. "Every time I transferred, I would have to catch up."

Vernon said the catching up caused his grades to suffer, and he received grades he said he felt could have been better under different circumstances.

Vernon said there are also a social barriers students must overcome being a military child.

"Socially, if you move to a place where military people are not, people already have their social cliques, and its usually not very welcoming," Vernon said. "If you move to a place where you're overseas, it's a lot different."

Kansas and Kentucky are the only states to have the House bill signed out of the 20 states that are actively pushing the bill.

"The goal is to get 10 states to ratify the compact this year," Carlin said. "Then after 10 states ratify, we can go ahead with the compact, so we're not out of the woods yet."

Mail delivery creates scare

A city clerk discovered white powder in a sealed envelope while sorting bills Monday at the Riley County Courthouse Plaza, according to a Riley County police report. An officer arrived on the scene at 12:30 p.m. and placed the envelope in a plastic bag in the trunk of a police vehicle, said RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup. Courthouse employees were then evacuated and exposed victims were contained inside the courthouse.

The fire department also responded, said fire chief Jerry Snyder. The Riley County Fire Department is the local extension from the Kansas HAZMAT unit, so the department was required to investigate, Snyder said. After dressing in their HAZMAT suits, the firefighters used a device called HAZMAT ID to classify the powder.

The device identified the powder as cane sugar, Snyder said. Moldrup also confirmed the powder was a non-hazardous material. Two people, including the city clerk, who was exposed, showed no signs of hazards or health problems.

Moldrup said the report noted that the envelope had been tampered with.

In another RCPD report, four tires and rims, more than 20 power tools and two fog lights were stolen from a Manhattan resident's vehicle. The victim left his vehicle on the side of the road at 1300 Gardner Road on April 11–14. The stolen items had a total value of $8,068, Moldrup said.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State Police responded to an out-of-control brush fire on K-State property in rural Riley County on Monday, according to police reports. The fire was contained by a rural fire department. No property was damaged and no injuries were reported, said Capt. Donald Stubbings of the K-State Police Department.

A purse was found in Weber Hall Monday and turned over to police that morning. The purse was returned to its owner later in the day, according to the police report.

Police were also dispatched to Jardine Terrace to follow up on a medical emergency early Monday morning. Stubbings was unable to comment on what the emergency was, but said the visit was only a follow-up.

K-State women's tennis coach Steve Bietau instructs players during practice. Bietau is the second-longest tenured coach in K-State history with 24 years at the university.

KSU coaching patriarch helped establish squad

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State women's tennis coach Steve Bietau has witnessed several of events during his tenure here. When he was hired in 1984, Dick Towers was the athletic director, Jack Hartman was the basketball coach and a man named Bill Snyder was just an offensive coordinator at Iowa.

"It was a different world," Bietau said. "But the thing that is consistent with now was that there were very good coaches here, and I had an opportunity here."

Bietau seems to have taken advantage of the opportunity. He inherited a tennis program that was in its 10th year and had not experienced much success. Bietau said the transformation was anything but easy.

"We had two main areas to change; the culture in the team, and we had to find ways to get more money," he said. "We had good players on our team, but we had been pounded so much that there wasn't a winning mentality. It was a big challenge to counteract that. Also, when you get two scholarships and everyone else has eight, it's hard to compete. But that gradually changed."

Funding was one of the biggest issues when Bietau arrived from Hutchinson Junior College in 1984. At the time, K-State also had a men's tennis team and the budget for both teams including Bietau's salary and travel amounted to $50,000. The budget allowed for four full scholarships that had to be split between the men's and women's teams. In 1986, the decision was made to cut the men's team, and Bietau credited that for helping the women's program become competitive.

"It was a very difficult decision for those involved but financially we were in such a spot where we had no chance to compete," he said. "It doubled our budget and got us to four scholarships. Having President Wefald and Bob Krause become more involved with athletics helped us adapt with the changing times."

Bietau's ability to adapt has been cited by many of his contemporaries as the reason he has been successful. Bietau has the second longest term in the history of K-State athletics, behind Ward Haylett who coached track from 1928-1963.

"Steve has been able to change with the times," Max Urick, athletic director from 1993-2001, said. "That's important for a coach to do so he can get the most out of his athletes. Many times coaches will get in a rut and lose touch with young people. He hasn't done that and he's done quite well."

College tennis teams often rely on foreign players for the bulk of their rosters. K-State currently has a 100-percent foreign roster. Bietau said it would be great to be able to have a full roster of domestic players, but to maintain a competitive edge, he turns to international players. He said now that the program has the money it needs to travel to Europe and South America to recruit, the hardest part is the language barriers and missing his family when he's gone. Recruiting overseas for weeks at a time is a different process, he said.

"It's difficult but simple," he said. "You have to understand what the program needs and the people who want to be here and buy into what we are doing. We're not a hotbed of tennis – now we have the resources to help move us up."

COACH BIETAU'S WINNINGEST SEASONS

1. 1989 14-6
2. 2003 15-8
3. 2000 14-9
   1990 14-9
5. 1997 12-9
   2002 12-9

Bietau has also built the team from his persistence. Senior Olga Klimova, from Brno, Czech Republic, said Bietau discovered her when she was "pretty young," so he could not talk with her. But after a talk with her sister, Bietau returned in future years and eventually convinced Klimova to sign with K-State.

Bietau has overseen a complete revamping of the tennis program capped by full funding for his team. The tennis teams are more competitive and on equal footing with many top programs around the nation. K-State has three NCAA tournament appearances under Bietau. The two Intercollegiate Tennis Association All-Americans in the history of the program came under Bietau.

Randy Peterson, assistant sports information director and the primary contact for the tennis program, said he believes Bietau's accomplishments have been important to K-State sports.

"His longevity at K-State speaks for itself," he said. "They've had three NCAA tourney teams in his 24 years here in a state that isn't known for tennis. His ability to develop a team with the right pieces says volumes about what he's been able to do here at K-State."

Bietau said he has a simple desire for his influence at K-State.

"I'm proud to be a part of K-State," he said. "I hope I did enough here to be remembered for performance and longevity."

Club sports get no respect

OWEN KENNEDY

A Saturday morning in college can be spent doing many things – tailgating, eating breakfast, watching cartoons or recovering from Friday night. We spend Saturdays enjoying pleasures for which we don't have time during the week, but while we are sleeping until noon or hitting the bars early, others are running, sweating and working. These brave souls are the club sports athletes.

On any given weekend during the school year, students can go to Memorial Stadium and watch rugby, soccer or lacrosse, or look elsewhere for softball. These athletes don't receive scholarships for playing and in many cases have to supply their own equipment while paying dues. This commitment is evident in the fact that some of these club teams are legitimate competitors in their respective leagues.

However, their commitment is not matched by the student fan base – or lack thereof. The stands at Memorial Stadium during a lacrosse game or rugby match are usually empty with the occasional exception of some of the players' significant others and families. If they're lucky, another team will wait for its game and watch.

It is disappointing there is so much enthusiasm for K-State sports that deliver nothing but money and mediocrity, such as football, basketball and baseball, yet successful club teams are lost in obscurity.

Most of the club games are free to attend, and they happen all through the week. A student could enjoy the weather, watch a competitive game, cheer on fellow Wildcats and save money, but we often don't take advantage of the offer.

According to Rec Services, there are at least 24 club sports teams at K-State, including trap shooting, cycling, fishing, volleyball and water skiing. These teams get little recognition and little acknowledgment outside of Peters Recreation Complex, but they continue to pay dues and travel to away games. As fellow students, we should support these teams even if they aren't mentioned on SportsCenter.

The alternatives to going to a game are few: check Facebook again, think about doing homework or watch a rerun of "Rock of Love." So leave the couch once in a while and be a fan of everything K-State.

Blue Jays come back to take down Cats in extra innings in Omaha

By Joe Bergkamp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State traveled to famed Rosenblatt Stadium on Tuesday night in Omaha, Neb., for the series finale with Missouri Valley Conference foe, Creighton. Unfortunately for the Wildcats, they lost 6-5 in extra innings.

After an empty attempt by the K-State offense in the second inning, the Wildcats surrendered the first hit of the night to Steve Winkelman when he doubled into center field for Creighton. Winkelman would eventually score after a sacrifice and a fielders choice.

Creighton was able to steal another run from the Wildcats in the third, when Darren Ruf doubled off Robby Knight. The Blue Jays took a 2-0 lead into the fourth inning.

Drew Biery took a 2-2 pitch from lefty Greg Hellhake high into left field and nearly knocked it out of the park in the fifth inning. The blast from Biery move the Wildcats within one run. After a walk for Daniel Dellesaga and a single by Sean Deisler, Brett Scott hit a double into left center that brought in Dellesaga and moved Deisler over to third.

The RBI double also knocked out Hellhake for the game. Hellhake controlled the Wildcats for four innings but left in the fifth. Infielder Carter Jurica kept the rally intact with a single up the middle that scored Deisler and Scott to move Wildcats out in front 4-2. Muenster got a piece of the action as well, singling in Jurica, who moved to second after a balk by a Creighton reliever. K-State ended up with five runs off of five hits and a stolen base by outfielder Adam Muenster in the inning.

"Biery gave us a great at bat, and it ignited us a little bit," Head Coach Brad Hill said. "Then, we just followed it up very well."

Creighton fired back in the sixth inning to tie the game at 5-5.

To lead off the ninth inning, Hill turned to last year's offensive leader, Byron Wiley, who has struggled this season with only 9 hits on the season.

"We've just been trying to get him comfortable and confident again," Hill said. "He's been working extremely hard, so it's just a matter of getting his confidence back. His swing is OK, but confidence is the most important factor to a hitter."

Wiley answered with a lead-off single that caused Creighton coach Ed Servais to call to his bullpen yet again, this time for ambidextrous pitcher Pat Venditte. After a sacrifice bunt and a ground-out, Venditte was able to get Jurica, who was 3-4 on the night, to strike out swinging.

A K-State player swings at a pitch during action earlier this season. The Wildcats fell to Creighton, 6-5 in extra innings Wednesday.

Creighton scored the winning run in the 11th with a two-out ground-ball that Biery was unable to field in time.

Evans to choose Terps

By Staff Report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

According to the Baltimore Sun, Motlow State Community College sophomore guard and K-State recruiting target Tyree Evans will sign a national letter of intent with Maryland.

Bobby Steinburg, coach of the Motlow State basketball team, confirmed Evans will choose the Terrapins over K-State, Arizona and Florida State.

Evans originally committed to K-State in 2004 before the offer was withdrawn after the guard was charged with statutory rape. The charge was later dismissed.

Evans then attended Butler Community College in El Dorado, Kan., before he was reportedly released from the team. Evans went on to attend Motlow State.

In his senior year of high school, Evans scored 884 points to become the third-leading scorer in Virginia prep history behind Allen Iverson and Moses Malone.

'Boondocks' creator addresses controversial aspects of show

By Whitney Hodgin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

Aaron McGruder, creator behind "The Boondocks" cartoon and comic strip, shows a clip from one of his episodes during his lecture in Forum Hall on Tuesday night. The lecture was hosted by the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity.

"The Boondocks" creator Aaron McGruder had an audience of about 300 people laughing and at ease as he spoke about the politics behind his animations Tuesday evening in Forum Hall.

He was the keynote speaker for Alpha week, which is sponsored by Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity.

In an informal stage setting, McGruder answered prepared questions from two journalism students and led a question-and-answer session with the audience.

The controversial show provided enough fodder for McGruder and the audience to touch on issues like "the N-word," the American political environment and censorship.

McGruder said he and his writing staff are not sensitive when it comes to offensive material, and they try to make "The Boondocks," which is centered around two black brothers living with their grandfather in a suburb, as realistic as possible.

Characters on the show use "the word" casually in their conversations, which many viewers, including Al Sharpton, find offensive.

"The goal of the show was to have characters communicate with each other as they would in a black community, behind closed doors," McGruder said. "And there's no way we can avoid using that word."

David Griffin, junior in social science and one of the on-stage interviewers, asked McGruder what he thinks of the prevalent use of the word in all mediums and generations.

"I'd rather have them use the actual word than say 'the N-word,'" McGruder said. "It's like first graders saying 'dookie,' – it's intellectually immature."

McGruder addressed the complexity of such word usage, and said the sensitivity people have toward it is rooted in the stagnant issue of race relations.

"We can't move in any direction in the issue of race because it hasn't gotten past the point of not saying it on television, and I didn't feel I need to be confined by language," he said. "We have no moral obligations to put on aires and be something we're not, and we hope our audience understands that point."

A clip of a particularly controversial episode of "The Boondocks" was played in which Martin Luther King Jr., – who in the show was not successfully assassinated, but instead in a coma until the 21st century – refers to a group of black people as "niggas" several times, and listed reasons why they were "actin' a fool." Because of the episode, McGruder and his team won a Peabody Award, which is a prize for electronic media.

"That was one of the times when we used the medium the best we could," McGruder said. "Putting those words in the mouth of MLK made them much more powerful. Al Sharpton was the only one who really had a big problem with it."

In response to Sharpton's media attack on that episode, McGruder said he prepared a press release stating he would personally boycott his own show. This, he said, killed the news factor of the issue because there were no longer two sides to the argument.

"I wasn't going to be controlled by the thought police and word police," he said.

Several audience members took advantage of the open microphones to ask McGruder questions. Paul Nyakatura, junior in information systems, asked if the overtly offensive character "Uncle Ruckus" represented McGruder's personal view of the black community.

"Only about 15 percent of what Uncle Ruckus says do I believe myself," McGruder said. "He's a black person who doesn't like black people, and there are a lot of people like that. My bus driver growing up was almost exactly like that."

Chris Bohnlein, sophomore in human ecology, questioned McGruder on how he justified the degree of profanity and controversy used in the show.

"I ask myself if what we have written is funny, or if it has crossed the line," McGruder said. "We don't use a lot of stuff because it doesn't justify our point. There will never be a consensus of what is appropriate for black entertainment."

"Is it justified if white people use 'the N-word?'" Bohnlein said.

"Use it, and you'll find out," McGruder replied.

CITY COMMISSION

Hatesohl named new mayor of Manhattan

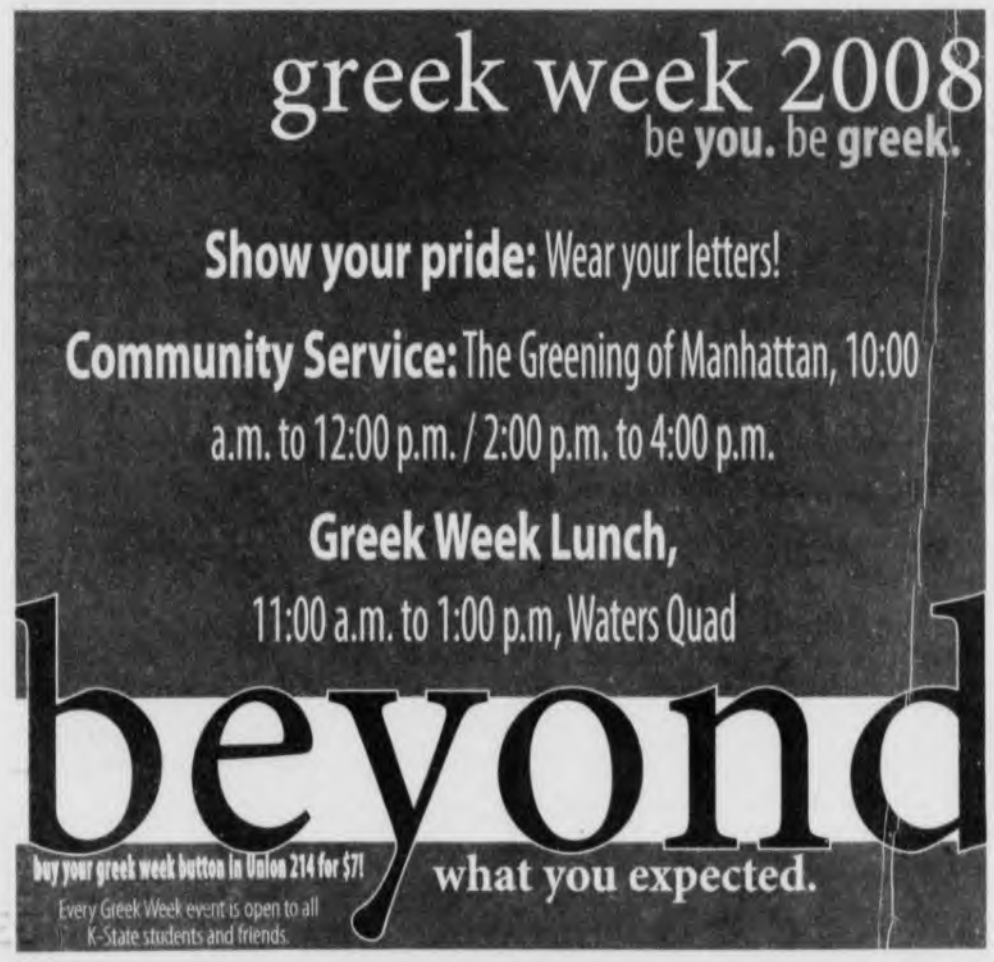
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Commissioner Mark Hatesohl was sworn in as the new mayor and Commissioner Bob Strawn took the position of Mayor Pro Tem last night during the weekly City Commission meeting.

"Wow, what a year," said former mayor Tom Phillips. "It has been a very rewarding year for me."

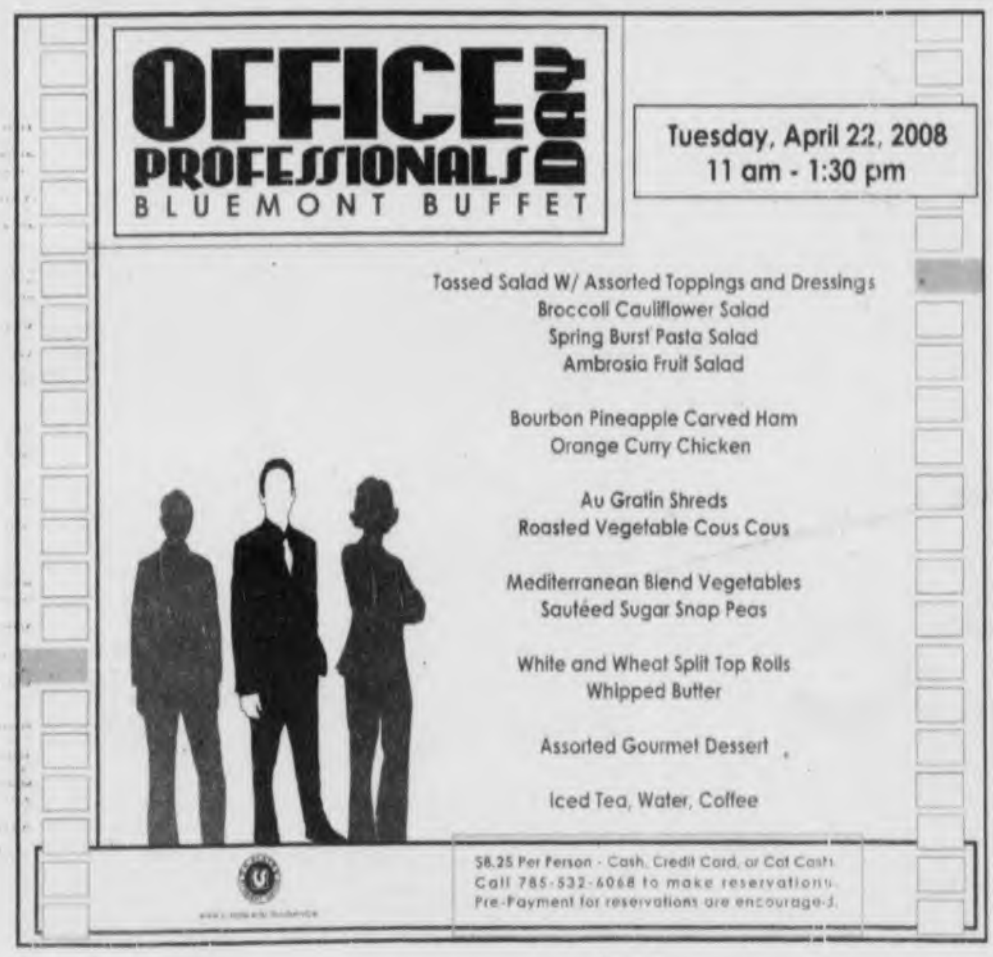
Later in the meeting, the commission decided to turn down the offer of the Prairie Lakes' land for a park area. Curt Loupe, director of Parks and Recreations said the development of the lake-side property would not be feasible for the city at this time. Loupe estimated costs of development and maintenance to be between $1.4 and $1.5 million.

Russell Weisbender, owner of Overlay Properties, said the company has sacrificed $500,000 in lost revenues to put in these lakes for the community.



"It was set up for an economic way to build homes and look nice," Weisbender said. "I will do it with or without you. I would like to make it with you."

Owners in the Prairie Lakes Development currently must maintain the lake costs. City Attorney William Frost said only owners with property adjacent to the lake are under agreement to maintain the site, not the entire 200 properties within the housing development.



City commissioners agreed to pursue the application for a U.S. Small Business Administration Grant for Child Care Facility Improvements. Debra Ring, director of the K-State Child Development Center said there are currently 109 people on the waiting list.

Jeff Rosenow representing Manhattan Day Care and Learning Center said MDCLC had 65 people on its waiting list. The new facilities would eliminate MDCLC's waiting list but only shorten the K-State Child Development Center's list. Ring said the new KSUCDC will break ground in September 2008 and should be completed by September 2009.

The commission unanimously approved the last general agenda item to enter into an agreement with the National Resources Conservation Service to rebuild the Pecan Circle Linear Park Trail. The city would be responsible for $26,950 and the NRCS would provide the remaining $80,950.

A myriad of music

Campus personalities share favorite artists, songs on iPods

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A football player, a top university administrator, an assistant dean of student life and two student body leaders are among K-State's well-known personalities. Their work environments range from Anderson Hall to Snyder Family Stadium to the Office of Student Activities and Services.

But along the way, these two men and three women have their MP3 players' earbuds in, listening to music like hip hop, country, classical and indie rock. The following are the playlists of five well-known K-State students and faculty.

JOSH FREEMAN, K-State football quarterback and junior in social science

— "More than a Memory" Garth Brooks
— "Lollipop" Lil' Wayne
— "Touch It" Busta Rhymes
— "Every Rose Has Its Thorn" Poison
— "Thunderstruck" AC/DC

In an e-mail interview, Freeman said he enjoys a wide variety of music and enjoys listening to music in his car and on his way to classes.

DUANE NELLIS, K-State provost and senior vice president

NELLIS

— Willie Nelson
— Shania Twain
— Kenny G
— Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart
— Céline Dion
— Rod Stewart

Whether he is running or relaxing at home, Nellis said he enjoys listening to a broad range of musical styles including country, jazz and classical on his touch-screen iPod.

LYDIA PEELE, student body president and senior in secondary education-mathematics

PEELE

— "Gone" Jack Johnson
— "The Way I Am" Ingrid Michaelson
— "Low" Flo Rida
— "Home" Michael Bublé
— "Black" Pete Yorn

Instead of an MP3 player, Peele uses Pandora Radio, a personalized Internet radio service. She said she likes making a list of her favorite songs and letting the site create a mix with similar sounding songs.

Peele said she recently has listened to more mellow music like Ingrid Michaelson, Jack Johnson and Norah Jones. However, she also said 'N Sync's "Bye Bye Bye" is one of her all-time favorite songs.

HEATHER REED, assistant dean of student life

– "Saturday in the Park" Chicago
– "Rocket Man" Elton John
– "I'm Your Baby Tonight" Whitney Houston
– "Home" Michael Bublé

Reed's cell phone also serves as her MP3 player, which she listens to while running. She said she mostly likes music from the 1970s and 1980s and bands like Earth, Wind and Fire.

REED

"I like that rich sound with full instrumentation," Reed said.

AMY SCHULTZ, Student Senate chair and junior in pre-medicine and biology

SCHULTZ

— "You're Gonna Miss This" Trace Adkins
— "Watching Airplanes" Gary Allan
— "Cyclone" Baby Bash featuring T-Pain
— "Sexy Can I" Ray J
— "Realize" Colbie Caillat

Schultz said she listens to her iPod nano most often when she's walking to class or working in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

"They put a smile on my face," Schultz said about the songs on her playlist. "They put me in a good mood the more I listen to them."

KING'S KITCHEN

Picnic meal offers gourmet look without hours of cooking hassle

BRETT KING

Most students like to be outside during good weather, and ladies tend to think a picnic is a great way to spend the day. The problem is many women tend to think it is the responsibility of their boyfriends to plan and prepare all the food.

The problems with picnics are the logistical aspects of bringing in pre-cooked food that won't spoil or lose its freshness during travel. While peanut butter and jelly works, it doesn't impress anyone.

Guys, have no fear; the following recipes are simple and give the image of a gourmet meal that can impress even the harshest critics. Pair these items with a nice bottle of white wine and enjoy.

DIRECTIONS:

Sandwich: Cut a one-foot-long section from the baguette bread, and then cut bread lengthwise to create two halves of bread. On each side of bread, drizzle balsamic vinegar and olive oil. Sprinkle salt, pepper and oregano on top of the vinegar and oil.

From the block of mozzarella, cut off sections a quarter of an inch thick and place on one half of the bread. Overlap pieces of mozzarella to fit as many slices as possible.

Cut the tomato into thick slices and place over the top of cheese. Place fresh basil above tomatoes on this sandwich. Cover with the other half of bread loaf and serve.

Salad: Grill chicken breasts until cooked thoroughly and set aside. Chop the romaine lettuce into pieces about one and a half inches long. Place lettuce, Parmesan cheese and croutons into a large bowl. Dice chicken into small pieces and add to salad mixture.

To prepare the dressing, blend lemon juice, vinegar and oil and set aside. In a small bowl, mash anchovies to a paste, then add garlic, Worcestershire sauce and black pepper. Add egg and lemon juice mixture to anchovy mixture and blend with a whisk until thoroughly blended. Pour desired amount over the salad; toss and serve.

MOZZARELLA, TOMATO AND BASIL SANDWICH

1 loaf of French Baguette bread
1 large tomato
1 block of fresh mozzarella
Fresh basil leaves
Balsamic vinegar
Olive oil
Oregano
Fresh cracked pepper
Salt

CHICKEN CAESAR SALAD

Salad:
2 boneless chicken breasts
2 heads of romaine lettuce, chilled, rough cut or torn ¾ cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese
1 cup of croutons

Dressing:
¼ cup fresh lemon juice
¼ cup red wine vinegar
¾ cup olive oil
2 large anchovy fillets
2 cloves of garlic, minced thin or pressed
1 egg, lightly beaten
Dash of Worcestershire sauce
Black pepper

BRITNEY SPEARS IS SET TO RELEASE "EXPLOSIVE" VIDEO DIARIES.

The "Toxic" star — who lost custody of her two children before being admitted to a psychiatric ward earlier this year — has been filming herself for the past six months and plans to show the world what she has been through by making the tapes public.

A source said: "If she does decide to go public with the footage, it will be explosive.

"Although some of the footage is really sad to watch, especially the parts where she is close to breakdown — others are dynamite."

Britney's former boyfriend Justin Timberlake and her ex-husband Kevin Federline — who co-starred in her MTV reality show 'Britney + Kevin: Chaotic' with — are said to be concerned the singer will reveal intimate details about their relationships.

The source added to Britain's Daily Mirror newspaper: "Justin Timberlake and her ex-husband Kevin Federline are terrified the material will end up on the Internet. Or, even worse, Britney will agree to another MTV documentary and release some of the footage through official channels."

In January, it was reported Britney's paparazzi boyfriend Adnan Ghalib was trying to sell six video diaries of the troubled pop princess for $2 million. The clips are believed to have shown the "Gimme More" singer "ranting, raving and weeping" and talking about herself in the third person.

THE KILLS GUITARIST IN POLICE QUARREL

Kate Moss' fiance had a furious quarrel with police after his band held a raucous party in their hotel room.

The Kills guitarist Jamie Hince and his group infuriated staff at a Barcelona hotel with their loud antics as they filmed a video in one of the suites.

After ignoring all pleas to keep quiet, staff phoned the police.

Jamie's bandmate Alison Mosshart said: "They demanded the tapes.

"They were called because we woke up some silly bd who couldn't take her hands off the phone to the front desk."

A source added to Britain's Daily Mirror newspaper: "It sounded like they were having a riotous party, with shrieking and laughing. It was the early hours and people weren't impressed.

"The police thing was a massive over-reaction but no one was arrested."

Debate team places 6th in nation

By Lacy Skinner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After placing sixth at the Cross Examination and Debate Association National Tournament, members of the K-State debate team said they can thank hard work, teamwork and diversity for the high national finish.

"Our team is one of the most diverse out of other schools," debate team director Justin Green said. "There is a wide variety of backgrounds, ages, sizes, sexes, you pick it."

Members' different backgrounds contribute to the team's ability to prepare a wide variety of arguments, he said. Some of the team's strength is also drawn from having an uncommonly large group.

"We have fourteen members, while other schools usually have five or six members," Green said.

More members can contribute to better, more thorough research as the team explores a variety of topics from every student's perspective, and Green said these diverse perspectives helped the team's ranking immensely during performance.

"One unique feature about this season is that every member of the team had at least one performance that contributed to the overall team ranking," he said.

The biggest factor that contributed to the debate team's performance was its cohesiveness Green said.

"We are an operated family. We operate as a collective unity," he said.

Though every member played a significant part in the team's national success, two members' performances stood out. Varsity debaters Elizabeth Mendenhall, sophomore in philosophy, and Kyle Zarazan, senior in computer science, placed in the top 50 at the National Debate Tournament, and Mendenhall also received first–team Academic All-American honors.

"It feels pretty good," said Mendenhall, who is a second-year debater at K-State after three years of high-school experience. "Next year we want to make it to the top five. This year everyone worked harder, was more dedicated, and we had more debaters."

Though Mendenhall said she will be on the debate team for the duration of her college career, she also said being on the team has its challenges, including balancing debate and school.

"We receive no grades for our research assignments, but we feel obligated to devote one or two hours a day to debate," she said.

Mendenhall said the team and coaches' hard work made the long hours worth it, though.

"K-State has the best coaching staff in the nation," she said. "Not only are they respected in the debate community, but they make debaters feel welcome."

This season's strong finish has given coaches and team members confidence that next year's team could be even better.

"We hope to attract driven individuals," said Green. "We accept applications from that special person who will devote time and energy to the team," Green said.

CES educates students on government jobs

By Michael Champlin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four government employees from four different agencies shared the positives and negatives of their jobs at a special presentation on finding a job in government Tuesday at 4 p.m. in the K-State Student Union.

It was part of Career and Employment Services' How-to Tuesdays. The event also highlighted two government job Web sites, www.jobs.ks.gov and www.usajobs.gov, where people can manage their federal and state applications and search for job openings.

The representatives on the panel were David Hinnen from the U.S. Secret Service, Lindsey Stephens from the Kansas Department of Transportation, Jan Clausing from the Kansas Department of Corrections and Penny Emmele from the Social Security Administration.

The panelists first gave an introduction of their individual agencies and spoke about what it's like to work for the government, then took questions from the audience.

SECRET SERVICE

Hinnen is a special agent with the U.S. Secret Service and is assigned to the secret service office in Wichita. He said the secret service has 143 offices across the world with the majority of them located along the East Coast in the Washington D.C. area.

Hinnen said his job as a special agent made him wear several different hats for the government including criminal investigations, protection work and intelligence.

"The first thing you need to consider if you ever consider going on with the U.S. Secret Service," he said, "is, 'Are you willing to relocate?'"

Hinnen has relocated three times to different parts of the country in the seven years he has been a special agent.

"This is not a job," he said. "This is a lifestyle."

KANSAS DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION

Stephens currently is a human resources professional and has been with KDOT for seven years.

She started as a temporary employee out of high school and worked at KDOT through college to achieve her current position.

Stephens said KDOT is based in Topeka and employs more than 3,200 people.

Positions in KDOT consist mainly of equipment operators and engineers, Stephens said, but support positions including managing administration and information technology specialists also exist.

FROM THE SGA PRESIDENT

President urges students to utilize K-State facilities

LYDIA PEELE

As Virginia Tech is experiencing the one-year anniversary of the tragic day that many of us vividly remember, we have also lost one of our own – a female student was also assaulted on campus. Any tragedy experienced on a university campus is one that affects our entire community, as we do not live on an island. There have been other situations at campuses similar to ours that have had a strong impact on anyone with ties to the school. Now is the time to put some serious thought into how we can improve the environment of the places we live, work and play.

We are at a crucial time in our academic careers. As much as we would like to deny it, dead week and finals week are right around the corner. Stress is mounting, particularly on those who are graduating and looking for a job. It is safe to say that at times, stress can make us more irritable and easily angered. There are different ways of dealing with stress, from practicing yoga to binge drinking. Given the right mix of the wrong attitude and a poor decision, problems can arise.

Perhaps there is no correlation between what has recently happened here, but maybe there is. We have the opportunity and the obligation to our fellow students to think about others who may be affected by the decisions we make. K-State has recently launched a new program called Healthy Decisions, which is "an initiative that was started to help enhance the lifestyle of K-State students and their peers [in an attempt] to enrich the culture of K-State and further develop an environment where students are supported and can succeed."

The program's Web site, www.ksu.edu/hd, is off to a great start, providing an extensive list of campus resources including counseling services, academic resource centers and the K-State Police Department.

We should take advantage of the services K-State offers us and also make extra effort to look out for our friends and even people we don't know. It could be your roommate who is dealing with four tests in one week or a classmate who seems to be barely making it. It might even be you.

We pride ourselves in being a big family, and it's time we step up and be true to our word. If you or someone you know could use some help, please utilize what we have right in our backyard.

Each of us play a key role in ensuring the safety and well-being of those around us, and now is not the time to let someone fall through the cracks.

MANHATTAN HOUSING AUTHORITY

Local activists to be recognized, awarded by Housing Authority

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Several community members will receive public recognition at 5:30 tonight in the City Commission chambers at City Hall, where the Manhattan Housing Authority board of commissioners will conduct its annual meeting.

The award winners will be recognized during the meeting's open period, which has time reserved for public comment, according to the agenda.

Among the items of new business is to approve the 2007 annual report and set goals for 2008.

JoAnn Sutton, MHA executive director, said the goals for the next year involve the progress of the Flint Hills development projects. One project only requires 13 more leases to be signed, and when it reaches 100 percent occupancy, there will be a ribbon-cutting ceremony at the site.

She said most of the other goals relate to the MHA mission to increase affordable housing in the Manhattan area.

The 2007 report contains information about residential and commercial development, the city budget and emergency and public services. It also includes a letter from City Manager Ron Fehr to the community, describing the state of the city.

A resolution to establish a written policy on paint requirements in residences is also listed as new business.

Sutton said there are already existing policies and guidelines to follow, but nothing has been written and approved by the board of commissioners, which is the purpose of that particular agenda item.

If a tenant has been at a residence for five years, or if it is needed sooner under certain circumstances, paint will be provided to the tenant free of charge if the tenant agrees to do the painting.

Student bartender enjoys work despite usually stressful weekends

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Under dim lighting and in front of a display of illuminated alcohol bottles, a K-State student chatted with her customers while rushing to fill their drink orders on a recent Saturday night.

While most students are at Tubby's Sports Bar to drink away the week's stresses of school and work, Cherish Wood is there to do her job.

Wood, senior in anthropology, has been a bartender at the Aggieville sports bar since it opened in June 2006. She said she initially applied for the job because it sounded like a fun place to work and make a lot of money.

"The atmosphere at Tubby's is really fun for me because I'm working with a bunch of my good friends who have become kind of like my family," Wood said. "It's definitely a lot nicer working there than at my past jobs. It also [provides] a lot of money really fast and has a pretty flexible schedule."

Wood said she typically works about 25 hours a week, mostly on the weekends. She said she usually arrives to work at 10 or 11 p.m. on weekend nights and works until 2 a.m.

Wood said the night shifts can be stressful.

"My weekend night shifts can get hectic," she said. "I work with a lot of people, and a lot of my customers want me to serve them drinks at the same time. It's a very high-paced job."

Wood said learning to balance her studies and work schedule has been difficult, and she often gets overwhelmed with two demanding time commitments.

"My job definitely conflicts with my schoolwork," she said. "It's taken a couple of semesters to get used to doing both things and balancing them out. It's been really hard, but it's taught me how to manage my time a lot better."

Wood said she plans to work in the education department of a museum outside Manhattan after she graduates this December. She said her job at Tubby's has enhanced her college experience and helped her in her career aspirations by allowing her to network with several students, and she said she thinks her position at the sport's bar fit her outgoing personality.

"I know a lot of people now because of Tubby's," Wood said. "It works for me because I really like talking to and dealing with people, and I consider myself a pretty personable person."

NBAF | Some residents reticent to idea of labs at K-State

Energy and Commerce Committee that accidents occurred inside the Plum Island Animal Disease Center on Plum Island, N.Y. While the 1978 release of the viral foot-and-mouth disease into cattle holding pens on Plum Island triggered new safety procedures, Homeland Security informed House Energy and Commerce Committee members that other accidents also took place inside the facility.

K-State and Manhattan is one of six finalists for the National Bio and Agro-Defense Facility, which will replace the 54-year-old Plum Island facility.

While concerns have been expressed about Plum Island research and its relocation to the U.S. mainland, the cited documentation is old, said Ron Trewyn, K-State vice president for research. The need for modern technology is one reason for building a facility like NBAF, Trewyn said.

Despite the Bush administration's acknowledgment, Manhattan residents and K-State faculty have not addressed concerns to university administration, Trewyn said.

"The reports that led to some of this information are tying together very disjointed events to make them appear to be of a greater concern than they really should be," Trewyn said.

Some K-State and Manhattan community members remain hesitant about Manhattan as a possible NBAF location, while university administration maintain that K-State is the best of the six proposed NBAF locations.

AN INDECISIVE K-STATE FACULTY MEMBER

Walter Dodds, K-State professor of biology, said he is undecided on Manhattan and K-State as NBAF's future home.

"My main concern about this is that there's not been a straightforward presentation of the risk analysis of what we would be facing placing a facility in a city, one, and two, in the center of the United States' agriculture production," Dodds said. "So, it's very difficult to make a decision on the risks just based on blanketed assurances that everything will be OK."

Dodds' second book, "Humanity's Footprint: Momentum, Impact, and Our Global Environment," was published earlier this year. His research specialties include water quality and aquatic biodiversity.

"I'm supportive of the research that needs to be done," Dodds said. "The threat of emerging diseases to agriculture and humanity is increasing. The probability of new diseases popping up and spreading around is increasing dramatically. I think that there's a greater need for this type of facility to be available to deal with these potential problems."

The Department of Homeland Security is preparing a draft NBAF Environmental Impact Statement based on scoping comments received from each proposed site.

A draft of the statement will be released in May, and Homeland Security will have follow-up scoping meetings at each proposed site.

Dodds said though he does not know specific risks associated with NBAF, he said he thinks the biggest chance for mistake is human error.

"The question is, how do you get rid of that aspect or minimize it to the maximum degree," Dodds said.

MAINLAND CONCERNS

Dr. Roger Breeze served as director of Plum Island Animal Disease Center from 1987-95. Breeze said the facility could safely relocate at the Atlanta campus of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, or at Fort Detrick in Frederick, Md., home of the U.S. Army Medical Research Institute of Infectious Diseases, according to an Associated Press report Friday.

Long Island also could serve as a relocation possibility because it has no commercial livestock industry, and it would allow retention of current Plum Island employees, Breeze said in the report.

Dr. Jerry Jaax, K-State associate vice president for research compliance and university veterinarian, served 26 years with the U.S. Army Veterinary Corps. Among his assignments, Jaax served as chief of the veterinary medicine division at the U.S. Army Medical Research Institute of Infectious Diseases at Fort Detrick in Frederick, Md.

Jaax said the world has changed significantly since the Plum Island Animal Disease Center developed as a foreign animal disease facility. When the disease center started in 1954, Jaax said its researchers were concerned about diseases "inadvertently arriving" on the U.S. mainland.

"I think that still is a concern, but I think that as far as the name itself is concerned, I think that calling it an agro-defense facility has more of a realistic ring of where they perceive threats to come from," Jaax said. "That is a broader sense than just quarantine or a research station for foreign animal diseases that they're trying to isolate and keep off the United States. I think it's a reflection of more of a shift of perception to we're trying to protect against these kinds of diseases, regardless of how or when they might arrive."

Stan Cox, a plant breeder at the Land Institute, an agriculture research and advocacy organization in Salina, said he thinks NBAF should be located within the continental U.S.

He also said the facility should be under the direction of the Department of Agriculture instead the Department of Homeland Security.

"When you put this sort of work under preventing terrorism or biological warfare, the experiments or the research that you do can be applied in a defensive way or an offensive way," Cox said. "While we want to prevent that kind of attack here, the chances are much greater that it's going to happen through importation of animals or material or various biological or economic needs and not introduced by terrorist means."

During K-State's All-University Open House on Saturday, additional NBAF information will be provided at the Biosecurity Research Institute, located in Pat Roberts Hall.

most people think of prisons when they hear of KDOC, the department is broader and includes eight inmate housing facilities, 40 parole offices and a central office that contains the agency's information services.

"[Working for KDOC is] not like the 'Green Mile' or other movies that you've seen," Clausing said.

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Emmele is the manager of the social security office in Manhattan. Social Security has offices in all 50 states and Puerto Rico. She said social security has two main divisions, field offices and payment centers. Field offices are local offices that deal with the public and assist with social security payments, replacing a social security card and other issues.

"Social Security has never had a layoff – ever," Emmele said. "Over 50 percent of Social Security managers will be retiring within the next 10 years. The opportunities will be there for advancement."

become aggravated while talking about the incident because the shootings are the first connection people make with Virginia Tech.

"So many people, when you say that you're from Virginia Tech, the first thing they ask is, 'Were you there during the shootings,' and after you say the story so many times, it becomes very tiring, and it's not something you want to dwell on," Furnas said.

Furnas said though many people in Blackburg have wrenching stories to tell, many others tell positive stories of how the university came together to mourn its losses, provide support to other community members and show courage in a time of strife.

Furnas said he often tells the story about how his staff at the Collegiate Times worked with little sleep to keep the university and community informed of the situation on campus. He said many of the students were friends or even roommates of the victims and kept working at the newspaper.

"Working was the best therapy for them," Furnas said.

INFLUENCE ON K-STATE

Since the shootings at Virginia Tech, K-State has improved several safety procedures on campus. K-State recently activated a text message emergency alert system that would notify all students and faculty via cell phone text message.

K-State has also worked to improve other aspects of its alert system, including the reverse 911 system that would call as many K-State numbers as possible in the 10 minutes after an emergency, and the carillon system in Anderson Hall, which plays the bells on campus at the top of the hour and could be used as a public announcement service.

According to a March 26 Collegian article, K-State and the city of Manhattan have also discussed installing an Alertus system, which is a system of beacons in high-traffic hallways that would light up and alert all students if an emergency were to occur. They have also discussed installing large steel doors that would lock automatically in case of emergency. Only people on the inside could open the door and workers at the campus police station would control when the doors should be unlocked.

Heather Reed, assistant dean of student life, said the Office of Student Life has not changed how it treats students since the shootings, but she did say professors and other university officials have collaborated with the office more to notify them of students who might need help. She said K-State professors are more likely to call the office now to notify someone if a student shows suspicious actions or attitudes.

Salazar said she is glad universities have improved security because of the Virginia Tech shootings, but school shootings cannot be prevented in some situations, and she said it shouldn't be the lasting image of the university.

"I understand people associate school shootings with VT, or Columbine for that matter, because it is still recent or because of the magnitude, but it does not define either of those schools, the people who went there, work there or live there," Salazar said.

Virginia Tech canceled class today, and a full day of events have been schedule in remembrance of the shootings. Several events will take place at the Drillfield, a park in the middle of campus where a memorial was constructed in August 2007. Though only two events are officially scheduled by the university and community, Furnas said many student and community groups are organizing events during the day. Gayle Spencer, assistant dean of student life, said she did not know of any events scheduled at K-State.

don't need any longer, and the building helps to do that," Scott said.

There have been several significant contributions to the building, which Smith said makes the building that much more of a reality.

"We are not done with the fundraising yet," Smith said. "There are still funds to be raised. There are more naming opportunities within the new building that can be named through contributions."

Shoop said the building construction should be an important event not just for the leadership faculty and 1,400 students but also the university.

"Several other centers will be developed as financing becomes available to develop new leadership centers," Shoop said. "It's going to be a historic moment at the time of a tight economy to actually have the opportunity to build this. This is an opportunity we provide to anyone on campus to come to the ceremony as we break ground on April 18th."

Parking Council to hold forum

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Council on Parking has organized a forum to address the parking garage construction and other parking adjustments.

The forum will be from 3 to 5 p.m. today in the Big 12 Room in the K-State Student Union. Lydia Peele, K-State student body president, said the forum will address the approved proposal by the parking council.

"I would encourage students to attend and voice

PROPOSED METHOD OF OPERATION FOR THE K-STATE PARKING GARAGE

The 1,384 stalls will be apportioned as follows:

500 area reserved stalls will be designated for students. Any commuting student purchasing a permit can also purchase an RFID (Radio Frequency Identification) tag, allowing parking in the garage. After the 500 stalls are filled, students may park in available timed stalls, at the prevailing rate.

134 stalls will be 24 hour reserved stalls, and will be sold at the 24 hour reserved stall rate

400 permits for faculty/staff area reserved stalls will be sold at $400 per permit, not including a W permit. These permits will allow parking in the garage but will not be a specific stall

350 stalls will be reserved for timed or conference use.

After 5 p.m., any student, faculty or staff member with a permit who has purchased an RFID tag may park in the garage at no additional cost, until the 900 available stalls are full. Then parking will be available at the prevailing rate, if stalls remain.

350 timed stalls will be available for those without permits and RFID cards, including visitors, conference attendees, etc.

The garage will operate 24 hours a day, everyday.

For the complete list of changes for parking next year go to www.ksu.edu/parking.

Senior wins 4 national forensics titles; team gets 4th

By Krystle Richard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jessy Ohl's passion can be seen in the intensity of his eyes and heard in the bass of his voice, which ultimately propelled him to his four titles at a national forensics competition – an accomplishment that has only been achieved once in the event's 31-year history.

Ohl also won the overall individual trophy at the end of the tournament. Ohl said the team and the coaches were very supportive and encouraging of each other and acted like a family.

THE NATIONAL TOURNAMENT

Ohl, senior in political science, placed first in three events, extemporaneous speaking, informative speaking and communication analysis, at the American Forensics Association National Individual Events Tournament. He also won the overall individual trophy.

After 30 to 40 hours a week of repetition, research and practice, the entire K-State forensics team placed fourth in the national among 300 colleges, said K-State forensics coach Craig Brown.

This achievement is monumental for both K-State and Ohl, one of many seniors on the team who graduate in May.

"It felt really good. It's something I had dreamt about all along," Ohl said. "I wonder if I will wake up and it wouldn't be real."

In a K-State Media Relations press release, K-State President Jon Wefald said, "Whether athletics or academics, I would rank Jessy Ohl's four national championships in the spring 2008 forensics tournament as one of the most brilliant accomplishments for a K-State student in my 22 years as president of Kansas State University."

The national competition was April 5-7 in Austin, Texas. Students were judged on a variety of criteria. Each event had a different goal. To advance to each round, the students had to place third or better in three rounds, Brown said.

Ohl also placed in three other events: impromptu, persuasive speaking and after-dinner speaking.

Unlike debate, forensics competitors develop multiple ideas because of the multiple events, said assistant coach Bobby Imbody.

"They do all the research and writing," Imbody said. "It's more performative than debate."

THE PURSUIT OF HIS PASSION

Ohl began preparing for the season during the summer.

"It's a tough process to pick your passion and something you're interested in," he said.

He stayed up-to-date with the news, researched background information and received ideas from coaches to develop ideas for speeches. The topic for his persuasive piece was close to home. Ohl discussed the dangers of corn ethanol as an alternative energy source.

"It's worse than gasoline, and it increases the risk of cancer," he said.

Ohl transferred from Iowa State University his sophomore year, so agricultural issues

'Predator' host speaks about show, journalism career

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Shining light on a previously little-known topic is the motivation behind the popular investigative NBC series "To Catch a Predator," an NBC news anchor said Wednesday night.

Chris Hansen, who is most famous for his role as the show's anchor, spoke for an hour in a packed K-State Student Union Ballroom.

The series involves luring men who are potential sexual predators into online conversations with actors pretending to be underage girls. The actors get the men to agree to a meeting at a house, and when the men arrive, Hansen appears and confronts them about what they are doing in the house.

Hansen began his lecture with jokes and the story of Conan O'Brien's pre-Emmy parody of his reports. Hansen said he likes all of the "buzz" his show generates but is careful not to overdo his celebrity cameos.

Hansen also gave a short history of the "To Catch a Predator" series.

"The whole thing started about four years ago when a friend of mine told me about the Perverted Justice Web Site," Hansen said.

Perverted Justice is a group that has been running sex predator stings since June 2004 and teamed up with NBC to broaden the scope of its effectiveness.

Hansen said that there have been many memorable busts, including one in which the alleged sex offender walked into the house completely naked.

"Never in my four years of taking classes at Michigan State University did they teach you how to interview a naked man," Hansen said.

Hansen also said the man was caught again the next day trying to set up meetings with underage girls on the Internet.

Hansen said that he and his partners have executed 12 separate stings and exposed more than 300 would-be sexual predators.

"All but a couple dozen have been or are being prosecuted," Hansen said. "Of those, 140 have either pleaded guilty or have been found guilty by a judge and jury."

Hansen also said that the punishments for the convicted have ranged from probation and registration as a sex offender, all the way up to a man in Georgia who received 14 years in federal prison.

When Hansen walked up to the podium, he was greeted by cheers that turned into a standing ovation.

The event's organizers knew Hansen's celebrity status would be enough to get students into the seats but were caught off guard by the number of people who attended.

"Based on his popularity, we expected a lot of people to show up," Powell Runyon, junior in construction science, said. "We talked to facilities, and we were prepared to set up extra chairs at the back of the room."

That popularity was enough to coax many into the seats.

"I wanted to see what he said about 'To Catch a Predator,'" said Jerrod Anderson, senior in sociology.

SCIENTISTS RECREATE NEANDERTHAL VOCAL ABILITIES

LONDON – Neanderthals have spoken out for the first time in 30,000 years, with the help of scientists who have simulated their voices using fossil evidence and a computer synthesizer.

Robert McCarthy, an anthropologist at Florida Atlantic University in Boca Raton, used new reconstructions of Neanderthal vocal tracts to work out how they would have sounded, NewScientist.com reported on Wednesday.

The conclusion is that Neanderthals spoke, but sounded rather different to us. Specifically, the ancient humans' lacked the "quantal vowel" sounds that underlie modern speech and which provide cues that help speakers understand one another.

ROMANIAN MAN REARS LION IN HOME GARDEN

BUCHAREST, Romania – Romanian media say a man was rearing a lion in his back garden until neighbors decided they had heard enough roaring and called police.

Rompres state news agency said police found a caged 3-year-old lioness, as well as two deer, a stag and two peacocks roaming the garden of the man's home in the southern village of Pietrosita. The agency's report Wednesday said the 28-year-old man is being charged with illegal possession of wild animals and could be sentenced to up to a year in jail.

TOW TRUCK DRIVER TAKES CAR WITH SLEEPING 7-YEAR-OLD INSIDE, THEN FLEES SCENE

DALLAS – A tow truck driver unknowingly hauled away a car with a 7-year-old asleep inside before returning the vehicle minutes later and speeding away, police said.

The panicked parents of the missing boy watched the driver hurriedly unhook their car and take off as they met with authorities late Monday, according to a Dallas police report. A possible kidnapping investigation at the apartment complex had already begun.

Fidel Retana Jr., 23, was pulled over a short time later and arrested on child endangerment charges. But police said Tuesday they expect to drop the charges.

KSU diversity deans work to reach out to all

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State was one of the first universities to hire diversity deans. Each college within K-State has its own diversity dean who, among other things works to recruit students who have been historically underrepresented at K-State.

Heather Huber's job as multicultural assistant for Ford Hall proved more difficult than she expected.

She has been working to teach the Ford residents about diversity issues locally and around the world. Huber has planned programs, put up bulletin boards and met weekly with her diversity team to teach the "girls that there are other people out there besides themselves."

"I don't think K-State is very diverse at all," Huber said. "I became an M.A. to close that gap, but it was a lot harder than I thought."

However, Huber is not alone in diversifying K-State's campus. K-State has hired deans for diversity for most of its colleges during the last few years.

The deans help the university reach out to people who are different from K-State's majority population. K-State is one of the first universities to have this position, said David Griffin Sr., assistant dean for diversity in the College of Education.

"We've set the bar," Griffin said. "K-State is a model for other universities who might consider adding this position.

"This university is unique in terms of moving forward and putting our money where our mouths are," Griffin said.

He said K-State has appointed Diversity Point People to each college. They meet monthly with Myra Gordon, associate provost for Diversity and Dual Career Development. Griffin said the goal of this group is not only to diversify each college, but the university as a whole.

"Our mission is to help the university understand the importance of diversity and to help professors and colleagues infuse diversity into their curriculum," Griffin said.

He also has promoted diversity on campus by ensuring that the university fairly hires faculty, and he sends out a weekly newsletter on "issues surrounding diversity, inclusion and teaching."

This is Griffin's fourth year as a dean for diversity and his sixth year at K-State. He said he has always been an advocate for inclusion.

"[The dean for diversity position] was a natural fit for me," he said. "I love what I do. Sometimes it's an uphill battle, but it can be done."

Madai Rivera is the coordinator of academic services and diversity in the Department of Human Ecology. She also helps the office of admissions promote diversity. This is her first year at K-State as a faculty member since graduating several years ago.

"I'm loving it, " Rivera said. "I say this every day. I love what I do, and I'm still learning."

Rivera works with Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco to recruit students and bring programs to K-State to retain multicultural students.

"I've learned to look at things from another perspective," Rivera said. "There's a lot of work that our faculty and staff do that students don't often realize."

Rivera said Diversity Point People tries to stay focused on the same goal by meeting together regularly. The university has a five-year Strategic Plan for Diversity from 2008 to 2013 that focuses on recruiting staff and students who have been historically underrepresented at K-State.

For one aspect of the plan, Griffin teaches an education course called "Teaching in a Multicultural Society," which all education students are required to take before student teaching. He said this helps students incorporate diversity before entering society.

"Now diversity is at the forefront of everything we do," Griffin said. "We must get along with everybody."

Huber said hiring deans for diversity is a huge step for K-State, which is known for its homogeneous population.

"We want to prepare students to live and work in a diversified society," Rivera said. "That's what we want to do at K-State – create an interconnected community."

Senate to swear in new members of SGA cabinet

By Michael Champlin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Governing Association Student Senate is set to approve 10 students to Student Body President Lydia Peele's cabinet tonight. Holly Myers, sophomore in life sciences, will be sworn in as a student senator to fill a vacancy.

In floor action, the senate will review legislation clarifying whether a senator's absence can be considered excused or unexcused under certain circumstances. This legislation is intended to settle an issue of course loads and schedules of student senators, especially those from the College of Veterinary Medicine, and establish consistency of the absence policy from year to year, according to the agenda.

Other legislation in final action includes the 2009 appropriation of the Student Centered Tuition Enhancements Fund and creation of the Special Committee on Big 12 Student Government Affairs.

SCTEF provides money to university programs that do not receive funds from other sources and provides initial funding to new programs. Proposed allocations for fiscal year 2009 include 15 different programs that will receive a total of $1,059,000. This resolution is a correction of Res. 07/08/83, which contained an error.

The new special committee will consist of 10 members of Student Senate and will be responsible for planning the 2008 Big 12 Student Government Leadership Conference and Big 12 Day.

The leadership conference will take place at K-State and will include representatives from every Big 12 school.

"Our plan [for the Big 12 Leadership Conference] is to highlight some of the projects we're proud of and to show that we really care about the people here," said Student Body President Lydia Peele.

The biggest challenge the new special committee will face is making sure the event is well organized and includes enough activities to fill the event, Peele, senior in mathematics education, said. She said SGA has already made progress in organizing the conference.

Removal of slaughterhouses causes overabundance

JESSICA HENSLEY

In the last few months, hundreds of starving horses have been seized by authorities across the country – a result of the rising costs of hay and fuel, a depressed economy and the dubious political actions of animal rights activists that have led to the closing of the now much-needed equine slaughterhouses in America.

According to a report in the Wall Street Journal, the number of horses whose owners will not or cannot care for them is rising at an explosive rate. Americans own more than 9 million horses today, up from just 6 million in the mid-1990s.

This boom in equine population has come at the worst of times. Of the more than 2 million Americans who own horses, more than a third of those owners have a household income of less than $50,000, and with the state of the economy, many of these horse owners are unable to afford the costs of equine care. The price of hay alone has more than doubled this past year because of rising fuel prices, which averages $6 a bale in some states, up from as little as $2 a bale in 2005.

In the past, this set of circumstances might not have led to quite the crisis horse owners face today. Until recently, a market for unwanted horses existed in equine slaughterhouses which, according to a Department of Agriculture report, processed upwards of 70,000 horses annually for human consumption in Europe and Japan.

Unsavory as it might seem to the sentimental, such slaughterhouses played a vital role in this country until they were shut down in 2007 because of pressure from animal rights activists.

Today, while some unwanted American horses end up in Mexican and Canadian slaughterhouses, thousands more are left to suffer and starve.

"It's scary," said Jennifer Hack, director of the U.S. Equine Rescue League, in an interview with the Wall Street Journal. The group, which shelters horses in five states, has taken in more than double the number of horses this year than in the last two years combined.

Still others are simply left to fend for themselves. The South Florida Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals recently rescued five horses that had been abandoned by their owners in the Everglades.

It was with good intentions that Americans began their crusade against horse slaughter within our borders – the intentions to end suffering and to speak for those who cannot speak for themselves. But those good intentions have led only to disaster. The thousands of horses that, in previous years, would have ended up going to a quick end in a slaughterhouse are now left to linger in homes that can no longer afford to care for them.

The truth is that we need horse slaughter in America. Unpleasant as it might seem, it is necessary for both the welfare of the economy and the welfare of unwanted horses.

Citizens should take action to help world's deprived

MARK WAMPLER

The speed and availability of information today begs questions about the responsibilities of citizens in this globally connected world. With the amount of information that is available, we can no longer feign ignorance. No longer are we hindered by dated information and location. What new challenges and responsibilities come with all of our resources?

With new technology, news headlines from around the world are a dime a dozen. For example, the war in Iraq literally happens in our living rooms every single day. I remember, when I was four years old, watching the Gulf War begin live on TV. It made a huge impression on me. I could feel that something monumental and strange was occurring. This wasn't like the Bugs Bunny I was used to coming from my TV. This was something dark and unnatural that worried me. Young children are very intuitive when it comes to things like that. It was the first time I can remember feeling scared.

I was in Santa Fe, N.M., during a spring break skiing trip when the first bombs dropped in Iraq. Sadly, my childhood innocence had been lost in the time that spanned these two wars. Watching this war was neither sad nor shocking but almost exciting, like the first sight of clouds that form before a huge thunderstorm. What can a high school student from Kansas do when bombs are falling on Iraq?

A great example of citizen action is found in the Community of Sant'Egidio in Italy. Thomas Cahill talks about it in his book, "Desire of the Everlasting Hills." This group was formed by a handful of high school students who wanted to influence their world, and it grew into a movement of more than 10,000 people. The members of Sant'Egidio do not live together. They are normal people and they have normal jobs, but together, they are a large and powerful force for good.

Years ago, members of the group took a risky and absurd trip to Mozambique, where they helped rebel guerillas and the government agree on a truce that ended 16 years of war after more than a million casualties. The group's most recent mission is taking care of refugees from Kosovo who are tired, confused and hungry.

What world leader believed Nelson Mandela could coordinate, through suffering and patience, the peaceful overthrow of apartheid in South Africa? What odds was William Wilberforce up against when he confronted the British Parliament with the idea that the trading of human beings, the largest source of income in England, was wrong? And how was a frail little nun named Theresa to confront the centuries-old caste system in India, one orphan at a time?

Jumping on a plane to Iraq to take care of refugees is not a realistic undertaking for every citizen of this country. What is realistic is the idea that we are all capable of thinking about larger issues other than the need to simply maintain our own lifestyles. This type of individualistic thinking is completely understandable – that's how America operates – but we need to start challenging that personal kingdom mentality.

Politicians execute policies, but the people elect the politicians. We cannot blame all of our problems on politicians – they simply reflect the spirit and age of the people. America and its government are certainly not the savior of the world as we sometimes believe, but its citizens have unbelievable opportunities.

"The impossible is often the untried," author Jim Goodwin said. Maybe what we all need a little more hopeful naivete.

TO THE POINT

Diversity is acknowledging

Diversity has become a hot topic among many college campuses and throughout the nation. Diversity is a word that – even because of its positive connotation – has been misused in many cases. However, K-State has taken proactive steps in ensuring that diversity is not only talked about on campus but actually is practiced.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The university has a five-year Strategic Plan for Diversity from 2008 to 2013 that focuses on recruiting staff and students who have been historically underrepresented at K-State.

K-State also has appointed Diversity Point People to each college. K-State is one of the first universities to have this position.

Though this position has been created and a strategic plan is in the works, there are still many steps K-State needs to take as a whole before true diversity and cultural understanding are achieved.

Diversity is not the amount of underrepresented students enrolled for the fall semester. Diversity is not the amount of events organized by the university related to promoting cultural sensitivity and awareness. Diversity is a more simple act of acknowledging the fact that there are different people from all walks of life who we work with.

It is the simple act of getting to know someone by asking questions, which might be uncomfortable in the beginning, to gain a better understanding of someone who is different from us.

It is the mindset that two heads are better than one and that the more diversity there is in any setting can only enhance the work produced by that particular entity, including K-State.

To that couple who was sitting in the library lobby with the greater amounts of PDA: Thanks for reminding me, you know, how much I hate myself.

Hey, Pike: Hasn't there been a case of a fire at your house within the last couple of years? Oh, yeah, your house burned down. That's right.

To the two boys at Old Stadium with the really hot backs: We just wanted to say "hi." Love, the Fab Four.

We're learning about alcohol in Organic Chemistry, which is ironic because that class is slowly turning me into an alcoholic.

Hey, you, good-looking female.

To the girls laying in the sun outside of West: Could you be any more attention starved?

OK, this is what I have to say: In case KU didn't make it clear enough that they're national champions, they replaced the KU sign that we painted purple on the highway, so I think someone should go change that. Thanks.

So I just got stuck in another elevator in Marlatt.

Wow, Greek Week just isn't what it used to be. Come to think about it, greek at all isn't what it used to be.

Working at Varney's is boring. Come buy more hoodies.

Every time I go into Varney's all I hear is Spanish music. What's up with that?

To the guys that just hopped the curb in front of us at the Rec: You're cute. We want to party with you. What house are you in?

We just lit up Pike in dodgeball. Oh, too soon?

Hey, should we poop in here?

Yeah, I just saw a girl put in four dryer sheets with a handful of clothes. Is that weird?

Alphas raise funds to honor MLK

Nathaniel LaRue | COLLEGIAN
David Hildebrandt, Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity member, helps raise funds for the Martin Luther King Jr. memorial that is being built in Washington, D.C. The national Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity has helped raise $93 million for the memorial so far.

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Members of Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity are honoring their respected alumnus, Martin Luther King Jr., by fundraising for the construction of a national memorial of the civil rights leader.

The memorial is intended to commemorate the life and legacy of King, acknowledge his contributions to world peace and represent anyone who has given a part of themselves to better mankind, said Bryon Williams, senior in economics and Alpha Phi Alpha member.

King's monument is scheduled to open in 2009, and he will be the first African American and third non-president to be honored in the National Mall area of Washington, D.C. His monument will be located near the memorials of former presidents George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln.

"Martin Luther King Jr., was a very prestigious, proud and active member of both our fraternity and the civil rights movement," Williams said. "It's time to commemorate his efforts, and there's no better way to do that than the national memorial on the D.C. strip, where he will be recognized with some of our country's founding fathers."

The King memorial is a $100 million construction project, and $93 million has been raised, Williams said. Alpha Phi Alpha initially had the idea to build the monument. The plan was proposed to Congress in 1984 and was approved in 1996.

After Congress passed the idea, Alpha Phi Alpha chapters all across the country began fundraising to start construction on the 30-foot, granite memorial. For the past 30 years, grants and contributions from supporting companies, organizations and individuals have been collected, though 50 percent of all funds raised were contributed from individual chapters of Alpha Phi Alpha across the country, Williams said.

The monument finally broke ground in 2006, a few months after Alpha Phi Alpha's 100-year anniversary.

"This memorial is a great way to compliment Dr. King's legacy," said Careem Gladney, senior in finance and president of Alpha Phi Alpha. "He was an extremely important member of our fraternity and our nation, and we are very passionate about raising money for this monument."

The "Dream Keepers" College Program was created to engage college students across the country to contribute toward building the memorial, and Alpha Phi Alpha members have become exceedingly involved in the program. Their enthusiasm and awareness toward King's achievements have supported both the program and the memorial, said Abdul Rasaka Yahaya, senior in civil engineering and Alpha Phi Alpha member.

"I care about this cause because I'm passionate about Dream Keeper and what it means," Yahaya said. "The program isn't about supporting just black history, but this is about American history."

To accept any donations from K-State students and faculty, Alpha Phi Alpha has a booth in the Union today from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. The group has raised more than $800 from K-State students, Williams said.

Mardell Maxwell, junior in management, practices the Facebook.com-based song "Be My Friend" with the rest of the K-State singers for their spring show at 7:30 p.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium.

K-State Singers to perform Friday night

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Broadway, jazz and even songs about Facebook.com will be added to the K-State Singers annual spring show.

The Singers will perform the show at 7:30 p.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium.

Amy Aadalen, senior in secondary education, said the Facebook-themed song, "Be My Friend," is one of several new songs that the Singers have added to their biggest show this year.

"We're doing a lot of songs that college students especially will get a kick out of," said K-State Singer Mardell Maxwell, senior in business.

"The Way You Look Tonight" and other jazz pieces and Broadway tunes are among the additions. The commercial jingle medley and the introduction song are K-State Singers' traditions. The group has been performing these two numbers for more than 40 years, almost since the choir began in 1954, Aadalen said.

"It will be a lot of fun," said K-State Singer Jason Miles, sophomore in animal science. "It's not your typical choir performance."

The group is a show choir, which essentially means the performers sing and dance at the same time, Aadalen said. Sixteen singers, four musicians and one sound technician comprise the choir. Only non-music majors are admitted to the group.

"Everybody in the group is just there because they love to perform and put on a good show," Aadalen said.

Maxwell said the show caters to audience members of all ages. The comedic aspect and acting make it entertaining and well-rounded, he said.

"We bring a sense of comedy to K-State music," Maxwell said. "It's a very high-energy show."

Dan Commerford is the choir's interim director for this school year. He took the place of Gerald Polich, who retired after 41 years of directing at K-State. Commerford was hired on a week's notice at the beginning of fall 2007, Miles said. K-State has hired Joshua Oppenheim to direct the K-State Singers beginning in fall 2008, Aadalen said.

"It was certainly a difficult change this year, but that just shows the stamina the group has," Aadalen said. "I think [Oppenheim] will bring the group to a whole new level and make it even better."

Commerford helped the group book a performance at Disney World during spring break, Miles said. The K-State Singers take about 30 to 40 weekend and day trips per year. They perform locally for high schools, clubs and the greek community, and occasionally travel outside of Kansas.

"We hit all over the place," Miles said.

Aadalen and Miles said the group's trips have allowed the choir members to get to know each other better. Aadalen said traveling also allows the choir to make a good impression for K-State.

Maxwell said this spring show is especially exciting because it is on Open House weekend. He said family members, Manhattan residents and, of course, college students attend the Singers shows.

"It's great that a lot of alumni can come in and enjoy some entertainment as well," Maxwell said.

Walker leaves for NBA too early

MIKE DEVADER

The moment Michael Beasley changed his verbal commitment from UNC-Charlotte to K-State a little more than a year ago, it became inevitable that he was going to go pro after spending one season in the Little Apple.

Fans and students alike should have seen this coming the moment Beasley stepped foot on the floor of Bramlage Coliseum.

He's simply not meant to be in college basketball, and if it wasn't for the NCAA rule, Beasley already would be playing in the NBA. He will be an all-star for many years to come.

The decision for the 6-foot-10 phenom to skip his final three years of eligibility was a no-brainer, but Bill Walker's decision to leave early leaves many scratching their heads.

True, Frank Martin said he thinks a player should go pro if they have an opportunity to help his family out financially, but why would Walker want to risk getting cut by a team and not having that financial security because he isn't ready yet?

Though his decision would have been catastrophic if he had signed with an agent, Walker has given himself a backdoor to come back to K-State for another season, and he should come back to school.

It's the best possible scenario for him and his family if he is thinking about going to the NBA mainly to help them out. With a slew of freshmen already going pro early and entering this draft, his goal should be to go after next year, dominate and play himself into the NBA lottery in 2009.

Based on how many players have put their names into the field, Walker will have trouble getting drafted in the first round, let alone in the top 15.

Walker needs to realize he isn't good enough to play in the pros just yet, and it's just not his time.

He is passionate, which is a good thing, but it can really hamper him if he gets too emotional. If something goes against him, he has a hard time getting over it. If Walker doesn't get the foul calls he wants, he has a tendency to be on the verge of a technical.

Walker can't act that immature in the NBA, and if he does, the NBA most likely will end up with a next-generation Rasheed Wallace on their hands.

There is no harm in testing the waters with his draft stock, but it shouldn't take Walker long at all to realize he needs to pull his name from the draft.

He needs to come back and be the Wildcats' team leader and try to lead them back to the NCAA Tournament. If he does that, Walker will have a much more lucrative payday when the 2009 draft rolls around.

WOMEN'S ROWING

Leading the pack

Veteran women lead youthful K-State rowing squad

By Brad Dornes
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On an inexperienced team, leadership must come from the few girls who have been through the battles and struggles and know what it takes to succeed.

The K-State rowing team has seen some ups and downs this season, but a constant this year has been the presence and leadership of seniors Bjai Rice and Jennifer Flannigan.

"I have told the veteran girls that they must step up this year," said coach Patrick Sweeney. "There is such a gap between the novice and the older girls that the older girls must lead the way for this team to succeed."

The pressure of leading the way fell squarely on the shoulders of Rice and Flannigan. For Rice, senior in biology and nutritional sciences, this season is her fourth year of competitive rowing and her second-straight year as a captain.

"Since this is such a young team, we have to put that much more work in to catch up to our competition," Rice said. "We as a team have handled it very well."

Along with being a captain, Rice has other responsibilities that include keeping the younger members of the team on the right track athletically and academically.

"We are like student coaches," she said. "We have all gone through the same things, and the younger girls come to us, and we help them through the tough times."

Rice said being on the rowing team has helped her in all areas of her life.

"It has given me the confidence that I never thought I would have," she said. "Being on this team drives me to succeed in other areas of my life like school and eventually my career.

"But the most important thing I have learned is to not be afraid of anything, especially failure. This team has taught me that the only way to fail is by not trying."

Flannigan, a junior in kinesiology and education, is also entering her fourth year as a member of the rowing team. She was recruited out of high school to be a member of the team and redshirted her freshman year.

"This is the most physically challenging sport that I have ever put my body through," Flannigan said. "That is what makes it so rewarding."

Flannigan is also seen as one of the leaders of the crew because of her experience.

"The older girls must show the younger girls how to push themselves to their limit," she said. "It's tough to do because we didn't have anyone to show us, but we do it for the team."

After college, Flannigan plans to be a teacher and a coach, and she attributes her confidence to pursue her teaching goals to the rowing team.

"Being on this team is a once-in-a-lifetime experience," she said. "The other sports will always be there. This team has taught me that I can over come any barriers that I used to think was impossible."

The mixture of experience and youth is what defines this crew, and coach Sweeney said he would not have it any other way.

"These girls go out everyday and give it everything they have," Sweeney said. "They are so close it's almost as if they are not a team but more of a family."

Track team heads to prestigious KU Relays in Lawrence

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The track and field team will enter athletes in more than 30 events this week at the 81st-annual Kansas Relays in Lawrence.

The prestigious event began Wednesday with the multi-events and will run through Saturday with most of the Wildcats starting competition today.

The meet, which has been at Kansas' Memorial Stadium since 1923, features a large field of college athletes as well as the state's top high school competitors and some elite post-collegiate athletes. The history and the level of competition make the Kansas Relays special for the athletes who compete in the four-day affair.

"It's been running for years and years," said senior thrower Kyle Seiler. "It is something that grandparents talk about remembering. There are always great athletes there. There's always Olympians and guys hoping to make the Olympics."

The Kansas Relays have featured some very prominent athletes. In 2001 alone the meet featured 30 Olympians. Senior jumper Thomaida Polydorou remembers being awestruck by the talent at the relays.

"Two years ago when I was warming up for the triple jump, Maurice Green was warming up right next to me," Polydorou said. "I thought that was special."

The Wildcats have collected 11 event victories at the meet in the last three years. Senior Laci Heller won the hammer throw in 2005 and 2006 and is the only former winner returning to the meet for the Wildcats.

Rugby team ranked in top 25 for 1st time ever

By Jose Garcia
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's basketball team received much attention this year from the national media, but the group is not the only men's team to be ranked highly.

The K-State men's rugby team received enough votes last week to make it into the top 25 for the first time in its history.

"Being nationally ranked is awesome," said Connor Smith, senior in architectural engineering. "It shows that we are a very good program on the rise."

With only three games left this season, the team could finish with 10-plus wins for the second straight year.

The team traveled to Dallas for the Western USA Collegiate Rugby Nationals, where it eventually fell to the then No. 8-ranked Colorado Buffaloes and were eliminated from contention for a title.

The remaining three games will be tough tests as injuries have plagued the team down the stretch of the season. Both co-captains Hale Sloan and Dan Knapp, sophomore in open option, are inactive for a highly touted club team game this weekend in Kansas City, Mo. Both players will be on the sideline with separated shoulders.

However, the players said they still think success is possible.

"There is no reason we should not win," said Sloan senior in biological and agricultural engineering and president of the rugby team. "If the guys filling in play to their ability, we should walk away with wins in all of the last three games."

At 7-3 overall and (3-1) in Big 12 conference play, the team has no lack of confidence in ending the season on a high note.

"If we play like we have all season, winning the last three games should be pretty easy," Sloan said.

After the Northland game this weekend, the Pitt State and Topeka rugby teams will travel to Manhattan to close out the men's season.

Martin signs 5-year contract

MARTIN

K-State vice president of institutional advancement and intercollegiate athletics Bob Krause announced today head men's basketball coach Frank Martin has signed a five-year contract to run through the 2011-12 season.

The contract states a base salary of $180,000 with a total compensation package of $760,000, which includes television, radio and internet appearances, shoe and apparel sponsorships and other services.

In his first season at the helm, Martin guided Kansas State to a 21-12 overall record, including a third-place finish in the Big 12 with a 10-6 mark. He became just the second rookie coach in school history to lead his team to the NCAA Tournament, where he helped the program capture its first NCAA Tournament win since 1988.

Junction City poised to support influx of returning Fort Riley soldiers

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The return of several units to Fort Riley from Iraq and Afghanistan is beginning to have widespread effects on housing and the economy in the region.

Junction City appears to be the most affected city in the area. Junction City Commissioner Terry Heldstab said he is optimistic about the situation and the additional benefits it will bring.

"In my view, the effects are very positive at this point," he said. "We have an abundance of vacant lots ready to be built on. The Fourth Brigade is not even halfway back, and we already know we're short on rentals.

"The Bluffs has 98-percent occupancy, and Eagles Landing is at 100-percent occupancy. I'm also really optimistic about the home sales and construction. The Junction City housing market is very good. It's what we need to bring business to town."

The boom in the area is not over either. The Fourth Infantry Brigade combat team is in the process of returning from Iraq with 3,400 soldiers, said Alison Kohler, assistant media relations officer for Fort Riley. About half are back now and the other half will be back in a week.

More arrivals will occur during the summer, including the return of the 70th Engineering Battalion. Along with the return of several smaller groups, the number of Fort Riley soldiers deployed abroad will then be around 4,000 and see little change until the end of the year, Kohler said.

Fort Riley has expanded the lines of communication with the Chamber of Commerce of a few local cities and recently put on a housing summit in which the goal was two-way communication, Kohler said.

"We intend to keep it up as our growth continues," Kohler said. "We intend to keep them updated."

Junction City Manager Rod Barnes said the state has a task force that meets on a regular basis to update residents on what is going on. Former Lt. Gov. John Moore leads the task force.

One of the efforts has been through Community Partnership Conferences. The conference is operated by Fort Riley and Maj. Gen. Robert Durbin. Kohler provided a PowerPoint from the February meeting, on which the focus was housing. Estimates of Fort Riley soldiers who need off-fort housing numbering are around 4,196. By 2013, estimates suggest there will be around 9,170 soldiers in need of off-fort housing. That amounts to a potential increase of 7,108 soldiers requiring off-fort housing in a matter of eight years.

The fort helps the soldiers find available rental properties; however it cannot help the soldiers find houses to purchase. Area realtors have been asked to give educational talks on home financing.

Heldstab said he has noticed the increased need for housing. Figures provided by Barnes show in the last three years, 56 new subdivisions have been developed, 1,400 acres of land have been annexed, and approximately 2,100 living permits have been issued.

"In years prior, we didn't have any new land annexed to the city," Heldstab said. "Most years we issue 40-50 building permits a year for new homes – it exploded."

Barnes said he remains optimistic about the boom in growth.

"Overall it's been great," he said. "The school district has grown; the city has seen retail growth. We're growing because of the fort growing but also because of new businesses deciding to locate here."

The economic effect of the fort was estimated to be $1.3 billion in fiscal year 2006, according to a report released from Fort Riley's Office of Plans, Analysis and Integration Center. Kohler said the anticipated economic effect is expected to be greater when fiscal year 2007 numbers are released. She noted the effects would be greater with the returning soldiers and would not be limited to housing.

"You'll have 3,400 extra soldiers driving cars, shopping, eating out and taking part in recreational activities," she said. "The economy will pick up with the number of soldiers in the region."

Heldstab anticipates the changes will occur soon.

"My own gut feeling now that the Fourth Brigade is coming home will be that a lot of families will follow," he said. "A lot were at Ft. Riley just in time to train briefly and head to Iraq.

"In the coming 30 days when the entire Fourth Brigade is back, a lot of homes will go. Then around the fall when the sustainment and aviation brigades return, there will be further positive impact in the area."

Carnival to kick off Fan Fest that concludes with Spring Game

Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many students and Wildcat fans look to the Spring Game Fan Fest as the starting point to another football season.

This year, participants can expect more activities at the Spring Game Fan Fest.

In addition to the Spring Game, the K-State athletics department and volunteers will host to the Ottaway Carnival from 6 to 10 tonight on the east side of Snyder Family Stadium. Friday the carnival will open at 3 p.m. and remain open until midnight.

"We wanted to say thank you to our fans by providing additional activities surrounding our Spring Game," said Laura Tietjen, associate athletics director.

Tietjen said there will be more adult rides as well as rides for children and games for all so everyone can enjoy the event. The event also will feature a barbecue competition.

"It's a much bigger carnival than we've had in the past," Tietjen said.

According to the press release, tickets are available for $3 for a single ticket, $20 for family packs of 10 or $55 for supersaver packs of 30. Wristbands are also available for $20. Prices will be reduced on Saturday for those with Spring Game football tickets.

Jonathan Knight| COLLEGIAN
An amusement park ride rests outside of Bill Snyder Family Stadium in the south parking lot. A number of rides have been setup in preparation for the Spring Game on Saturday.

The carnival is the opening event of K-State's Fan Fest Weekend. Tietjen said she expects many people to visit the campus as Open House also falls on the same weekend.

"This year our game is also the same weekend as the University Open House," Tietjen said. "We would love to have K-Staters feel that this is a destination weekend for an annual trip back to campus."

The Spring Game offers more than a next-season preview; it is also a time for K-State to recruit new students.

"This weekend has also become increasingly important in recruiting, as many prospects will be on campus for the Spring Game," Tietjen said.

The Spring Game tickets cost $5, and the game kicks off at 6:30 p.m. Parking is complimentary.

A one-hour autograph session for Wildcat fans will follow the game.

"We are very fortunate to have such an active and involved student fan base," Tietjen said.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pizza is a college meal staple, and Manhattan is steeped in the pie's history.

For example, the Pizza Hut in Aggieville is the oldest in existence, and there are several other pizza places around town that could one day give them a run for their money.

While Manhattan has several international chains, there are some home-grown restaurants in the area worth checking out.

I evaluated three pizzas from smaller chains, based on crust toppings and sauce.

Pizza Shuttle and Gumby's Pizza and Pub sell their pizza into the early hours of the morning, especially on the weekends, but Lemmy's Pizzeria might serve the best.

PIZZA SHUTTLE - 4 AND 1/2 OUT OF 5 (1800 CLAFLIN RD)

The one aspect that sets Pizza Shuttle off is its toppings. Even if you order a one-topping pizza, they don't leave much visible cheese. I got a Canadian bacon and pineapple pizza, and I think half the weight was the toppings. There were a lot.

Also, the toppings were above the cheese – not under it – and were spaced well so there were not more toppings on one slice and none on the other.

Beyond the sheer amount of them, the toppings were very good. The pineapple was fresh and juicy, and the Canadian bacon was cooked well and was not rubbery at all. It was how a Hawaiian pizza should taste.

The sauce is just average. It wasn't really good or bad – it was just ordinary. It wasn't at the forefront of the flavor and it blended nicely.

If you decide to get a pizza from Shuttle, make sure to get the ranch to dip the crust in. It's almost as if they were engineered to taste excellent together.

LEMMY'S PIZZERIA - 5 OUT OF 5 (CORNER OF 4TH ST. AND FORT RILEY BLVD.)

Lemmy's has the best pizza in the city, hands down.

The first thing I tasted was the sauce; Lemmy's also has the best sauce. It is sort of sweet, and when eaten warm, it dances in people's mouth even after they have swallowed. I thought it was a little unusual.

The toppings are also under the cheese, and that makes for an interesting taste experience. I ordered pepperoni, and like Shuttle, they were spread out consistently. The pepperonis were also fresh and a little spicy which mixed nicely with the sweet sauce.

The crust was the weakest area of the pie. It was like Shuttle's sauce – unremarkable. I felt like it was only there to hold the sauce, toppings and cheese.

GUMBY'S PIZZA AND PUB - 3 OUT OF 5 (701 N. 11TH ST.)

Gumby's is the most average pizza of any of the joints I reviewed. It was good pizza, but there isn't much to distinguish it from most other pizza places.

I got the Gumby's version of the supreme, and I was less than impressed.

I felt like whoever put the toppings on was wearing a blindfold. There were some bites that had no toppings and some bites I needed to use both hands to support because of the influx of toppings. That the placement of the toppings on the pizza might seem trivial, but eating a pizza with unequally spaced toppings is just annoying.

The sauce was just like any other sauce and tasted good but ordinary.

Pizza Shuttle offers many different types of pizza and many different toppings, including jalapenos and pepperoni. One of the more different but popular toppings is cream cheese.

MUSIC REVIEW

Panic tries too hard to change style

"Pretty Odd"

Review by Adrianne DeWeese

Bands with significant commercial success after a debut album often opt to reinvent themselves with follow-up albums. Panic at the Disco turned the dial too far on the volume control of change with "Pretty. Odd."

A follow-up to Panic's 2005 debut album "A Fever You Can't Sweat Out," "Pretty. Odd." features a psychedelic, folk-rock sound – think the Beatles circa 1967 and "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band." Band members abandoned their eyeliner and William Shakespeare-inspired couture outfits; the Panic men now have long hair, and the exclamation point is absent from their name.

Ryan Ross, lead guitarist and back-up vocalist, ditched his Chuck Palahniuk novels as inspiration for lyrics. Instead, "Pretty. Odd." features original storytelling in songs like "Nine in the Afternoon," the album's first single. The song has a lighthearted, silly feeling with its title and lyrics: "Into a place, where thoughts can bloom/ Into a room where it's nine in the afternoon/ And we know that it could be/ And we know that it should/ And you know that you feel it too."

The album also features vocals from all four Panic members. Ross, the band's original lead vocalist, shares lead vocals with Brendon Urie in songs like "Northern Downpour." The song is a smooth and relaxing mid-album song.

"We're So Starving," the opening track, is the album's cheesiest and weakest point. With one Panic member saying "Here we come" in the background to start the song, the 1:21 "We're So Starving" states, "Oh, how it's been so long/ We're so sorry we've been gone/We were busy writing songs for/You." The song also states fans have no reason for worry; Panic at the Disco is still the same band – but the band has changed and evolved in its three-year history.

Recordings for the album took place at the Palms Casino Resort in Las Vegas and Abbey Road Studios in London. Though the album includes many conceptualizations and images reminiscent of the Beatles' final years, "Pretty. Odd." deserves admiration for its orchestral instrumentals. Though the band nearly had an album recorded in summer 2007, its members scrapped it entirely and started from scratch.

Urie, Ross, bassist Jon Walker and drummer Spencer Smith have grown up in the three years since they went from unknown to worldwide musical sensation. "A Fever You Can't Sweat Out" addressed dark themes like adultery, alcoholism and prostitution with too much makeup, baroque dancing and circus imagery.

Though the Panic guys took the Beatles' emulation a step too far with their new 'dos and 1970s acid-trip clothing, their second album combines the best of both worlds in its poetic lyrics and musicality – it's pretty, and it's odd.

ASK THE FIFTH YEAR

Manhattan offers plenty of opportunities for an enjoyable weekend

I get so bored in this town, what can I do?

ADAM REICHENBERGER

I get bored in this town too, but here's what I did last weekend: On Thursday I went to Porter's for free tacos and pints. We didn't intend for them to be free, but the waitress never came back. While we waited, I raised my glass in celebration. "Here's to me, dear friends, and that poor child I'll be raising in another seven months." Dustin looked like he was about to hit me, while Eric was simply ecstatic.

On Friday, I picked a random house and delivered a dozen roses to the girls living there. Then later I went to play quarters at O'Malley's until they kicked us out.

Drinking games are a lot of fun at bars; I don't know why more people don't partake. We had about 10 of us crowded around a table, quarters flying everywhere. I suck at that game, by the way.

Later, I was with my friends Nolan and Sara. Nolan, who apparently is Asian (I had no idea), leans over to me as another girl sits at our table and says, "I know that girl, and not because she's Asian. We're not all related you know." Yes, Nolan; I was aware.

On Saturday, things got interesting. I had a family reunion down in Ost, Kan. Don't bother looking it up; it's not on the map. Well, we get down there, and my mom said, "Adam, there are a lot of pretty girls here." She was elbowing my side while she spoke. I paused for a moment to take in what she just said.

Reichenberger reunions are something to marvel at; everyone looks the same, and no one talks to anybody. You've got 10,000 furballs just waiting for the first person to leave so the rest can follow without feeling guilty. So I left.

When that debacle was over, I returned here to find all but one of my friends were in Kansas City. So Jay, the lone friend in town, and I did the only sensible thing we knew: We broke into their house, put on all their clothes, ravaged their liquor cabinet, ate their food, cranked up their stereo and rocked out to the Beatles and Bob Marley all night.

Right about now they should be finding pictures of it all over the Internet. It's their fault, really. They should know better than to leave town without inviting us. They've got much nicer clothes than I do, and I think we woke the family next door at about midnight. But again, that's not our fault.

"Let's all go to a Royals' game and not invite Adam and Jay."

Fine, but I'm going to wear your clothes, drink your wine, and if your girlfriends are around, I'll be making out with them too.

So that's what I do when I get bored. You might try some of those activities. But if you're going to make up a lie about being a father, have a mother's name in mind – that's what got me. I just froze.

ing in it in high school, and they look forward to the meet every year.

"It's great because friends and family can come watch," Seiler said. "It's such a big meet. It was good for me in high school because the top high school athletes in the state get to go, and so you get the chance to compete with kids from other divisions. In college it's nice because you have the extra support there."

Seiler will make his fifth trip to the relays after competing once in high school and every year since he has been at K-State.

Unlike many other students at K-State, the track and field team does not have an intense rivalry with the Jayhawks. Polydorou said some athletes can be very competitive, but most are friendly and are just trying to put up good marks.

For Seiler, competing at the relays against Kansas and other area schools like Wichita State and Emporia State creates camaraderie rather than rivalry. He said for the most part athletes are just trying to push each other to perform better.

The meet also allows the Wildcats to watch some of their Big 12 Conference competition before the conference championships on May 16.

"It's great just to size them up," Seiler said. "This is the time of year that you have to start throwing well and competing well. You can see how they handle the pressure in a big meet like this and gauge how they are going to react to the Big 12 meet."

While most of the Wildcats will compete in Lawrence, three of the team's distance runners will head to the SAC Relays in Walnut, Calif., at Mount San Antonio College. This marks the third consecutive week the Wildcats will send athletes to separate meets.

PARKING | Forum to address garage concerns

their opinions," Peele said.

In the proposal for the parking garage, 500 spots will be allocated to students and will be available for anyone who purchases an off-campus permit, like an "O" pass.

Peele said, after a certain time, any student with a parking pass will be able to park in the garage for free, as long as they have a pass. She also said the council plans for the garage operate 24 hours a day.

"If we see the need to change the proposal, we could, but as far as the student side of parking, that is what we are doing," Peele said.

For faculty parking, the council is not planning to oversell spots because faculty tend to be on campus all day and leave for meetings and would like to have their spots back when they return, Peele said.

"The garage will alleviate the parking in other areas," Peele said. "For now we are set to open [the garage] in the beginning of March, but that could change as time goes on, depending on how the project goes on."

Though the price for parking will increase, this was decided prior to this year. Peele said they had been aware of this price increase and it is the reason they are able to fund the parking garage. Though, the price increase will take some getting used to, students at other schools in the Big 12 Conference pay more to park on campus, she said.

Other than buying a parking permit, students also will have the opportunity to park in the hourly parking spots in the garage. There will be about 300 spots for hourly parking. Students will receive a ticket upon entering the garage and turn in the ticket when leaving.

Before having a set proposal, the council started out with many different options, but after discussion, the members decided this was the best way to go about the parking situations, Peele said.

"If it doesn't work, we can change it," Peele said. "The parking council works continuously throughout the year and has the ability to change it."

Gary Leitnaker, assistant vice president for human resources and parking, said the parking council, which is made up of faculty, staff and student representatives, is proposing changes, and students who have additional ideas or opposed to ideas should come.

Other proposals discussed in the forum will be the price increase of student permits and the 16-hour stall being eliminated.

All the proposed changes are going to be discussed, and it is important for people to come and give their opinion, he said.

"For change in parking regulations and what different things are going to cost, if they are interested in providing comments, pro and con," Leitnaker said, "we will use that comment on whether to vote to disapprove or approve something."

FORENSICS | Squad acts as close family

like ethanol have always been a part of his life.

"The very fact that our country is putting energy into this is a tradgedy," he said.

Ohl prepared extensively for each speech.

He even tracked down the original researcher of a topic and paid $250 for visual aids, Brown said.

"All the pieces have a solution. I write letters to Congress. I've started a Web site," he said.

Ohl, who spoke with confidence and articulation, admitted that he does get nervous.

"I want to do my best for my team; I don't want to let them down," he said.

Ohl has been competing since high school and said there were many reasons he joined the forensics team.

"I was pretty good at speaking," he said. "It seemed really fun, and I got to say what I wanted and how I wanted to."

A FAMILY EFFORT

Ohl said the team and the coaches were very supportive and encouraging of each other and acted like a family.

"All the people I aspire to be like are the coaches," Ohl said.

Like most families, there is competition between the members, but it is more similar to sibling rivalry. "We do root for each other," he added.

Brown and Imbody said they have seen Ohl improve in many ways since he arrived at K-State.

"He was really eager to take on any coaching ideas we had," he said. "He would use it, and if it was good he stuck with it. If it wasn't, he would try something new."

Ohl, also president of the forensics team, said he's learned much about life from being on the team.

"Every round people pour out their souls," he said.

Ohl said forensics gives people a reason to vent, and it gets people to open up.

Thirty minutes before each performance, Ohl and his teammates did warm-up rituals to prepare. Even with the preparations, Ohl said challenges arise each time he steps on the stage.

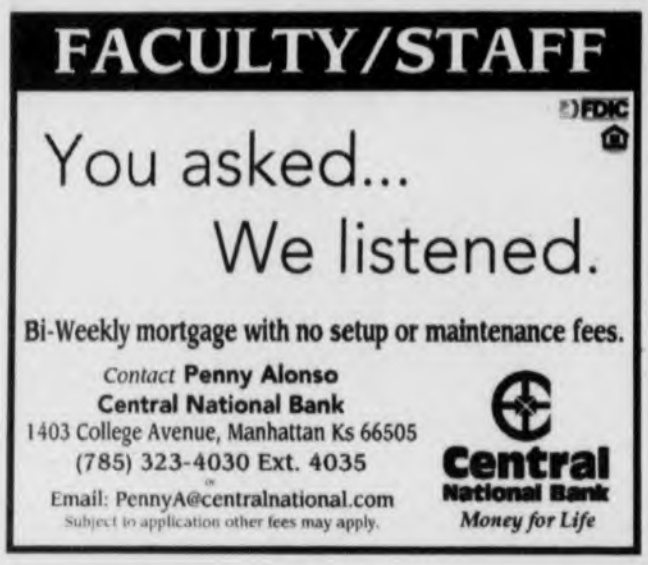
"The challenge with each piece is to be effective and getting others as interested in 10 minutes as I am," he said.

However, the time spent preparing has taught him many lessons.

"I had to realize there is a broader picture, the speech should not end with me," he said.

Ohl said he plans to attend graduate school at the University of Alabama, where he will also coach the forensics team.

Ohl said he will cherish the relationships he has formed at K-State more than just the championships.



"It's winning the respect of my team that I care about more," he said.

No walk in the park

Women, men chant, march through town to spread awareness

By Whitney Hodgin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 100 women marched from the K-State campus to City Park Thursday night to reclaim what is rightfully theirs: a safe night on the town.

Trying to draw as much attention as possible, the female students, faculty and Manhattan residents chanted phrases like "Women unite; take back the night," "We're women, we're here, we're fabulous," and "No more patriarchy, no more rape!"

"It makes me sad that we have to scream these things," said Ellen Welti, freshman in open option. "But I'm happy that these women have come to try and make them true."

Ana Abente, freshman in English; Shireen Roshanravan, assistant professor of women's studies; and Marquis Clark, graduate student in political science, gave speeches during the opening ceremonies held in the K-State quad – the area behind Hale Library and Waters Hall.

Despite the wind and 45-degree weather, Abente said she wasn't too cold to read aloud a poem about acceptance and racism.

"We were so pumped up we didn't feel the cold – there was so much adrenaline," said

With the bottom floor packed with people sitting on the floor as well as watchers observing from the second and third floors, the K-State Union Courtyard was filled Thursday night with students, faculty and the Manhattan community all anticipating Greek Week's main annual event, Greek Idol 2008.

"The best thing about Greek Idol is the participation from all the greek houses," said event coordinator Alex Wilson. "You know everyone is going to be excited and that really helps with planning."

Wilson, senior in psychology, helped plan the event since January. Greek Idol is similar to K-State Idol in that students had previously auditioned for a panel of judges and were then chosen to participate in the actual event, she explained.

"It really came together this year," she said. "Having done it before last year, things went a lot more smoothly."

Greek Idol is one of the more highly attended events and for the last seven years, has become a favorite to the greek community. The talent showcase displayed a variety of musical talents within the greek community varying from country to even trash can percussion.

"It was really exciting," said Rachael Leisy, sophomore in family studies and human services. "There was a lot of variety – lot of really unique talents from all kinds of genres."

Leisy is a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma and came to support her fellow sorority member. She said it was exciting to see the support system of the community and was impressed by all of the performances.

"This is a great way to come together in the greek community and to see all the talents that are in the greek houses," Leisy said.

Bicyclist injured by vehicle off campus

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A bicyclist traveling eastbound off campus was struck by a vehicle on Thursday, according to a Riley County Police Department release. The bicyclist, Christopher Hopkins, 24, was transported to Mercy Regional Hospital in Manhattan for a cut to his head and several broken teeth, said RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup.

The accident occurred at the intersection of North Manhattan Avenue and Vattier Street. Hopkins was struck by a black 2001 Ford Explorer.

No arrests have been made according to the RCPD release.

Several crimes reported on campus

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State Police handled multiple incidents on Wednesday and Thursday, including a hit and run and a theft.

HIT AND RUN

Police responded to a hit and run Wednesday in parking lot D1, according to a K-State Police report.

When the owner of the car returned to the parking lot, she said someone had backed into her vehicle at some point during the day, said Capt. Donald Stubbings.

TASERING

A student in Goodnow Hall called campus police Wednesday to report a taser had been used on him earlier in the day. The student claimed another student used the weapon on him. Stubbings declined to comment on the case, as the investigation is ongoing.

FOUND ANIMAL

Police were called in response to a bassett hound that was found wandering near Seaton Hall on Tuesday night. The dog had no registration tag and was taken to the Riley County Animal Shelter, Capt. Stubbings said.

THEFT

Police received a call in response to the theft of two Caribbean style flower pots, according to a K-State Police report. The base saucers, soil and pansies that were stolen had a total value of $73.10, according to the report.

VEHICLE INVESTIGATION

Housing and Dining Services reported a motorcycle had been tipped over at 1600 Hillcrest Drive. The vehicle was leaking gasoline and is believed to have been knocked over by the wind. The K-State Department of Environmental Health and Safety was called to clean up the gas.

"They do a clean-up on it to make sure there are no chemicals that can pollute the ground," Capt. Stubbings said.

Husbands of soldiers work through stress, worry

By Rebecca Perez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When married soldiers deploy, they leave behind loved ones who must form a support network of their own. Many spouses depend on friends, family and organized groups for support. A deployment can be especially hard for male spouses of female soldiers.

Anthony Meyer is the 26-year-old spouse of an Army captain at Fort Riley. He and his wife have a 3-year-old son and a 1-year-old daughter. When his wife deployed to Iraq, their son was 2 years old, and their daughter was 10 months old.

During his wife's deployment to Baghdad, Meyer said he found it hard to find face-to-face contact in a support group. Family Readiness Groups are available to Army spouses, but because of constant gossip, he said he was wary of becoming friends with women in an FRG. Instead, Meyer serves as a liaison for FRGs, and he said it is this connection that gives him the greatest comfort. He can be supportive to FRG leaders and groups without worrying that people will mistake his intentions.

To avoid trouble, he developed a system of only talking or spending time with women in FRGs if he has met and spent time with their husbands. Meyer said he had even been threatened with beatings from irate husbands, though nothing inappropriate had happened.

Meyer said since FRGs can be uncomfortable for him to attend, he threw himself into his work.

"I work 40 hours a week," he said. "Work was a true blessing in disguise."

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Anthony Meyer and his wife, an Army captain, stand behind their two children at their home. Meyer said he works through his wife's deployments by working 40-hour weeks and serving as liaison for area support groups.

For Meyer to work while his wife was gone, he needed daycare, so he found off-post daycare for his children. The daycare he chose has a rule that forbids employees from talking about deployments and the War on Terror. It is up to parents to decide when and how much information the children receive. This helped insulate his children from the reality of a missing mom, Meyer said.

"Phone calls were hard for the kids to deal with – it made them feel like Mom was close by," Meyer said.

Because the phone calls were so hard on their children, the Meyers decided to limit phone calls to once per week or every other week.

Meyer said he needed an outlet for his stress, so he relied on television to relax after his children were in bed. Despite his desire to relax, he ended up watching less TV than usual because of news reports.

"I like to keep up with the news, but I didn't want to expose my children to news on the war, so I received most of my news from the Internet," Meyer said. "News on the war is often politicized, so I got most of my military information from the Fort Riley Web site."

Meyer said the hardest part of the deployment was his wife's return home because his grandmother passed away right before his wife left Iraq. They decided Meyer would go to the funeral, but the children stayed behind with a friend.

Senate OKs committee, tuition enhancements

By Michael Champlin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate voted in favor of the creation of the Special Committee on Big 12 Student Government Affairs and appropriated $1,059,000 to student-centered tuition enhancements last night. Appointees to Student Body President Lydia Peele's cabinet were also inducted.

Student Senate appointed Holly Myers, sophomore in life sciences, as a new senator from the College of Arts and Sciences. She received the next highest vote total in March's elections and was sworn in to fill a vacancy in the Student Senate.

The new government affairs committee will consist of 11 members of Student Senate and be responsible for planning the 2008 Big 12 Student Government Leadership Conference and 2008 Big 12 Day on the Hill. The leadership conference will take place at K-State and include representatives from every Big 12 school, according to the agenda.

The Senate unanimously passed the resolution to correct Res. 07/08/83 and allocate money for 15 different programs receiving a total of $1,059,000 for fiscal year 2009. The student-centered tuition enhancements fund provides funding to university programs that do not receive funds from other sources and provides initial funding to new programs.

Lydia Peele, senior in mathematics education, swore in 10 members to her cabinet following their approval by the Student Senate. New cabinet members include:

Chief of Staff – Mary Fox, junior in political science

State Governmental Relations Director – Katie Beye, senior in political science

City Relations Director –Brandon Steinert, junior in

FEEDBACK

Editors respond to Beasley, weather

Friday's To The Point column features the editorial board's favorite and least favorite Fourum comments throughout the week. The board members will state their opinions about selected Fourum comments.

"I walked across campus today, put on and took off my sunglasses four times and had to use my umbrella once. Give me a break, Kansas. Come on."

Well, as shown from the weather we experienced Wednesday and Thursday, apparently Kansas is trying to prove a point. Don't get too summer-like just yet.

"So I just saw Michael Beasley at a Lakers-Clippers game on a school night. So does that mean he's going to be late to class tomorrow or what?"

According to an April 5 Wichita Eagle article, Beasley took all his classes online this semester and was done in February. But we couldn't say for sure. All questions regarding those matters should be taken up with his agent, Joel Bell.

"I don't care if there's no crosswalk. Pedestrians always have the right-of-way."

Jaywalking aside, you might be in danger if you walk out in front of a moving vehicle expecting it to stop. If the driver had no chance to avoid you, you will probably be at fault.

"This is Chris Hansen with Dateline NBC. Why don't you have a seat over there?"

This was really him.

Ban together

New kind of amendment needed to preserve marriage

MARQUIS CLARK

Men cheating on their wives and giving press conferences, teenage TV stars pregnant by older men, polygamist ranches where hundreds of young girls are being sexually abused you tell me if gay marriage is the most pressing attack on the American family.

Religious and political leaders have tried for sometime to get Congress to pass a federal marriage amendment that would read, "Marriage in the U.S. shall consist only of the union of a man and a woman. Neither this Constitution or the constitution of any state, nor state or federal law, shall be construed to require that marital status or the legal incidents thereof be conferred upon unmarried couples or groups."

Opposition to gay marriage and gay families often takes on the tone of the absurd. Christian leader James Dobson's book "Marriage Under Fire" presents several arguments against gay marriage including, but not limited to, gay marriage will open the door to polygamy; the gay agenda is to degrade marital relationships to make divorce instantaneous; public schools will be forced to present homosexuality as normal; and even foster parents will be forced to have sensitivity training to rid themselves of bias.

So what is the state of marriage and family in a world protected from equal rights for homosexuals? According to the Centers for Disease Control, in 2005 the U.S. divorce rate (3.6 per 1,000) was nearly one-half the marriage rate of 7.5. According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, the number of children waiting to be adopted in September 2006 was more than 500,000, and the number entering foster care has risen since 2002, while the number exiting the system has remained fairly constant.

According to the American Bar Association and the U.S. Department of Justice, almost two-thirds of women who were killed with a firearm were killed by their intimate partners. The number of women shot and killed by their significant others was more than three times higher than the total number murdered by male strangers using all weapons combined in single victim/single offender incidents in 2002.

According to Childhelp, an organization working to address child abuse, an estimated 906,000 children are victims of abuse and neglect every year. The rate of victimization is 12.3 children per 1,000 children, and 90 percent of children younger than age 12 who are raped know the perpetrators.

So, I propose a constitutional amendment to ban heterosexual marriage. To protect our women and children, we must stand together against the evil institution of heterosexual marital union, an institution in which both women and children encounter the majority of the violence they will suffer in their lifetimes.

Now, my critics would say such an amendment would be crazy – not all heterosexual marriages end in divorce, and not all children are abused. That is true.

But what we must acknowledge is the fact that not giving the homosexual population the full rights of citizens, by denying them the right to marry and making it difficult for them to adopt, is not protecting children or the institution of marriage. In fact, according to a March 2006 report from the Evan B. Donaldson Adoption Institute titled "Expanding Resources for Children," "children adopted by gays and lesbians fare no better or worse than those raised by heterosexual adults."

Separate has never been equal in America. Legally recognized civil unions are not the same as marriage just ask those couples filing their taxes who can expect to pay 10 percent more than married couples who file jointly. The excuses for continuing to deny law-abiding American citizens their rights are flimsy at best. As long as the homosexual community is not treated like full citizens and their relationships continue to go unrecognized and undervalued, our country is again failing to live up to its creed.

Physical harm growing as entertainment form

Christina Klein | COLLEGIAN

KELSEY CHILDRESS

When excerpts from a 30-minute video posted on YouTube.com showed up on the evening news, it made national headlines. Six girls who punched and slapped a 16-year-old girl in Bartow, Fla., because of a myspace.com post the girl made, became instant celebrities when KWTX-TV in Waco, Texas, aired "Bond Set for Teenagers in Videotaped Beating Case."

Now the six girls, ages 14-18, are being charged as adults for kidnapping and battery, and two other teenage boys, ages 17 and 18, are accused of being lookouts while the attack took place.

The plot thickened on Monday when a producer and assistant for Dr. Phil McGraw's talk show paid for one accused girl's bail, so she could do a segment on teen beating for the popular talk show, according to an article posted on E! Online on Monday. With the nation supporting the victim, Victoria Lindsay, it was probably not good for Dr. Phil's image to be seen helping one of her captors get out of jail.

The show's producers have decided not to go through with taping a segment featuring the accused, but the video itself and this Dr. Phil fiasco has brought to light again the line the entertainment industries might cross when violent images are shown or uploaded on the Internet.

However, the problem isn't necessarily video games and movies, but who is watching them. "Does game violence make teens aggressive?," an article published on MSNBC.com in 2006, said researchers at the Indiana University School of Medicine say brain scans of children who played a violent video game showed an increase in emotional arousal – and a corresponding decrease of activity in brain areas involved in self-control, inhibition and attention. Other studies show higher emotional responses in children who have just watched violence on TV. But parents should not blame the game and TV show creators, but instead they should blame the market that plays them.

Our society, as a whole, is now built on showing the best form of entertainment possible, which includes showing murders, war and other crimes. People want to experience things they normally never would in real life, and it affects some people in different ways. In a society in which violence in movies makes them a blockbuster, it is hard to blame children and teens acting out based on what they see on TV and in the movie theater. But what people see everyday certainly affects them.

Whatever these teenagers wanted when they decided to post that video on YouTube and MySpace, it probably wasn't charges that carry a life sentence. But our society needs to look at the types of images that are being broadcast to young children and teenagers as a way to hopefully figure out a solution to the growing number of violent crimes committed each year.

Placing blame doesn't solve problems, and focusing instead on the reason behind behavioral trends will help get our society to a place where consideration and entertainment can reach a happy medium.

Scholars group allows students to teach other students about diversity

By Jasmine Hammond
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As ambassadors for diversity, the purpose of Tilford Dow Scholars is to educate the K-State community on issues they might face every day in the real world.

Every Tuesday morning at 10:15 a.m., five scholars and two advisers discuss how they can promote multiculturalism on campus.

The Tilford Dow Scholars, which is funded by the DOW Multicultural Resource Center, is a Tilford Group branch. The group consists of faculty members who are dedicated to promoting diversity at their respective campuses and are striving toward continuing on the legacy of Dr. Michael P. Tilford, whom the group is named after.

Tilford was one of 100 African-American educators in the United States who received Ford Foundation Grants for advanced graduate study. At Wichita State University, Tilford conducted a study regarding the institutional commitment to minorities. He also developed a proposal for the minority studies program. The Kansas Regents Conference on Diversity and Multiculturalism was later re-named to recognize Tilford's work.

"We are looking for outstanding leaders and students who are committed to diversity," said Juanita McGowan, assistant dean of diversity for the College of Arts and Sciences and chairwoman for the Tilford initiative.

McGowan has been part of the Tilford Group for the past 10 years.

"We recognized we needed a student component and I believe that they can expand the university interest in diversity and in the community," she said.

Students who are interested in becoming a Tilford Dow Scholar can submit an application and are interviewed by a committee who selects the scholars. Once the students are selected, they are given the opportunity to address diversity issues among their fellow students, faculty and community.

Throughout this school year, the scholars have been on panels and have gone to the middle schools in Manhattan to discuss diversity issues in regard to race, gender, politics and stereotypes many students face every day.

Patricia Rodriguez, graduate student in business administration, said she heard about the Tilford Dow Scholars through a bulletin board that read, "Want to increase Diversity?" She said she was intrigued and decided to apply.

"All of us have really developed from being a scholar ourselves because we get to go out to the middle schools, do public speaking and panels and really get to tell our story and how we have been a success here at K-State," she explained.

Along with Rodriguez, the scholars consist of Abraham Alem, junior in electrical engineering; Deborah Muhwezi, junior in broadcast journalism; Maria Romero, senior in elementary education; and Ross Ullrich, junior in interior architecture.

Rebeca Paz, PILOTS adviser, is in her third semester of helping with the Tilford Dow Scholars.

"[McGowan] approached me and asked if I would supervise and help with the Tilford Dow Scholars, and I told her that I would be delighted," she said.

Paz said the scholars develop activities to promote diversity on campus. The scholars also are awarded a $1,500 stipend per semester.

They meet weekly to grow in areas of diversity within different venues to promote multiculturalism and to create dialogue across the campus, she said.

All of the scholars come from different backgrounds and bring them together to build a unity to enhance diversity at K-State, Paz said.

"We talk about our own growth in diversity, our own path," she said. "Each scholar comes from different cultures, and they each have a unique perspective on things."

Group, competition to educate campus about trebuchet operation, history

By Deborah Muhwezi
K-STATE COLLEGIAN

Cantaloupes will fly high in the air this afternoon at the American Society of Mechanical Engineers' Trebuchet Competition.

The competition will be at 4 p.m. at the fields north of the Peters Recreation Complex. It will feature students who built their own trebuchets. According to the competition rules packet, each team will be scored on a compilation of distance and accuracy.

K-State's chapter of ASME has been planning the event for a year in the hope of educating people about the trebuchet and its abilities.

"Most people, when they see a trebuchet, they see it as a catapult and it is, it's just modified," said ASME project manager, Bil McPhail.

McPhail, senior in mechanical engineering, joined ASME last semester and was designated as the project manager because of his prior knowledge. He said trebuchets were used during the Renaissance Era as a weapon and are similar to a catapult in the sense that gravity pulls on one end while there is a lightweight projectile on the other end.

"I have done a lot of things at Renaissance festivals and I have a lot of knowledge of that time era," he said. "I have also built one before, not as big, but I've built one."

ASME president Samuel Brinton, senior in mechanical engineering and vocal music performance, said this is the first trebuchet competition ASME has held in a few years. In the past, the group used to compete with just the civil engineering department, so members wanted to open the competition up to the entire university, he said. While the initial purpose of the competition was to inform the campus about ASME, the group's goal is to educate people about the trebuchet.

"This has been a very big learning experience and I want other people to learn this as well," Brinton said. "This will be taking what is learned in the classroom and applying it."

Cats must bridge gap to 2009

COLE MANBECK

The post-Michael Beasley era has begun. We won't know for a while if Bill Walker will stay in the NBA draft or if David Hoskins will receive one more year of eligibilty for medical hardship, but there are reasons to be optimistic. K-State fans should take a line out of the song "No One" by Alicia Keys and sing – "Everything's gonna be all right."

The Wildcats gain Denis Clemente, who redshirted this season and practiced with the team after transferring from the University of Miami, Fla.

Clemente was a highly sought after point guard coming out of high school in Florida, where he led the state in scoring with 33 points per game his junior and senior seasons. He comes to K-State after averaging 9.8 points per game his sophomore season with the Hurricanes.

Clemente has been timed going baseline-to-baseline in 2.7 seconds on the dribble, making him one of the fastest guards in college basketball.

Jacob Pullen will be back for the Wildcats and will look to build on a terrific freshman season, when he finished third on the team in scoring with 9.7 points per game and led the team with 3.2 assists per game.

Pullen's game is built on penetrating defenses and driving to the basket to score.

As absurd as it might sound, Pullen might be helped by Beasley's absence. Teams constantly double- and triple-teamed Beasley in the post, which clogged the lane and often limited Pullen's ability to drive.

Dominique Sutton's suffocating defense will return and hopefully his offensive game will appear with a full offseason with the team.

Jamar Samuels, who also redshirted this year, will look to contribute to the team. Coach Frank Martin said Samuels is sensational and arguably the most athletic player on the team.

Then there's Ron Anderson, who came on late for the Wildcats and was pivotal in the win over Southern California, when he scored 10 points and grabbed eight rebounds.

Martin has said many times that he wants to push the tempo, and he will be able to do just that next year. The team appeared gunshy at times this past season before allowing Beasley to touch the ball.

Perhaps, by losing Beasley, team members will be less hesitant to take the open shot.

The point is, don't hit the panic button just yet. Martin has already secured two verbal commitments for 2009 from power forward Wally Judge, ranked the 26th best player in the country, and shooting guard Rodney McGruder, the No. 73 player in the country, according to Rivals.com.

This is not a one-and-done team – it will be back. The Wildcats must build on the momentum they created these last two years and show the nation that they are more than just Michael Beasley.

If Walker and Hoskins come back, then just maybe the Cats can come close to what the University of Texas did this year without Kevin Durant.

A chance to move up

Tennis team hoping to climb from Big 12 cellar

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Steve Bietau said he has a few simple goals for the K-State women's tennis team this weekend.

With two matches against Iowa State at home on Friday and at Nebraska on Sunday, the Wildcats could significantly improve their ranking before the Big 12 Conference Tournament. Anything else will likely keep K-State in the conference cellar and force the Wildcats into a tougher first-round match-up.

Bietau said he hopes to see the same hard work out of his Wildcats that he has seen all year.

"We've been getting stronger in doubles and singles – doubles is probably a little bit ahead," he said. "I'd like a continuation of our past efforts. But we need to have a tough-minded mentality that says we're here for business."

A break from the Big 12's stiffest competition finally has arrived in the form of Iowa State. The Cyclones (4-12, 0-9 Big 12 Conference) have dropped 10 of their last 11 matches. The Wildcats also own a 17-match winning streak over the Cyclones.

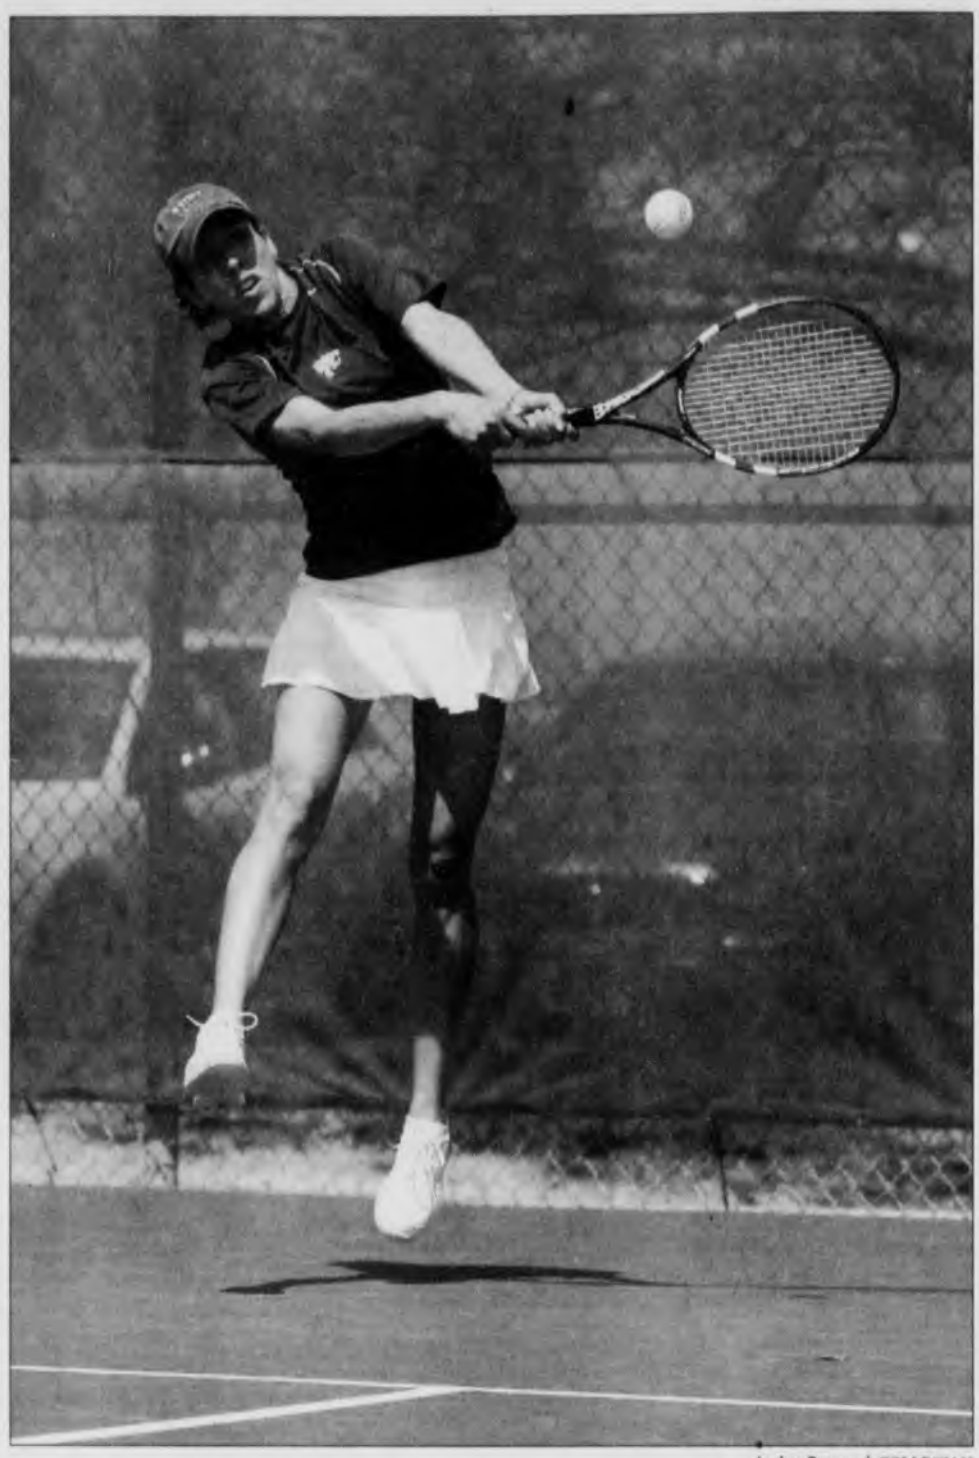
The story is different against the Huskers (15-5, 4-5). Senior Imke Reimers and sophomore Wiveca Swarting lead Nebraska in singles play with records of 19-7 and 18-5 respectively. Reimers and freshman Jana Albers lead the doubles effort with a 15-3 mark.

Bietau said the team could see better results, even if its performances are the same.

"We made some improvements last weekend, but the teams were strong enough that it didn't translate into results," he said. "This week is a different story – you need to sustain and win."

An effort similar to the one the Wildcats posted in doubles against Texas might be sufficient. Senior Olga Klimova and junior Katerina Kudlackova topped the Intercollegiate Tennis Association's No. 21 doubles team of Vanja Corovic and Marija Milic 9-7. Fellow senior Viviana Yrureta and sophomore Natasha Vieira were also victorious in their match over Stephanie Davison and Caroline Larsson 9-7.

The match against Iowa State will be the last home match for the two Wildcat seniors. Klimova, a four-year veteran from Brno, Czech Republic, has suffered knee injuries throughout her career, but that has not prevented her from posting a formidable doubles record. Over her career, Klimova has a 48-47 record in doubles play and an 18-10 record against Big 12 opponents. She also has recorded a 31-46 mark in singles play. Klimova said she still thinks about what could have been.



"I feel like I've been injured so much," she said. "I feel like I haven't accomplished everything I wanted to. Looking back, I think I improved a little bit and the last match at Texas, it was a good point of my career beating a school like that in doubles. I wish my career would be longer than four years."

Yrureta has only had two full seasons with the Wildcats. She began her career at Central Florida, where she never played in a match as a freshman. After transferring to K-State in 2005, the Puerto Ordaz, Venezuela, native was injured most of her sophomore year. As K-State's No. 1 singles player for most of this year, she has a 33-39 singles record in her collegiate career. In doubles play she has a 32-45 record with a variety of partners.

Bietau said he will need the seniors and underclassmen to perform well for a victory.

"Normally we talk about a complete performance, but we haven't had much like that," he said. "The freshmen have done a good job but it's the end of the year, and it's time for them to step up. The vets are a little more proven with what's going to happen. I want a complete sustained match by six players."

The Wildcats' home finale will begin at 3 p.m. Friday at the Washburn Tennis Facility at Peters Recreation Complex.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's rowing team will look to carry its momentum from last weekend's victory over Kansas to the Southern IRAs this weekend.

The Wildcats will travel to Oak Ridge, Tenn., to compete against some of the toughest teams in the nation.

"We will see as high of quality teams this weekend as we did in San Diego," said coach Patrick Sweeney. "This is a good opportunity to see how fast and good this team can be."

After completing the season sweep of in-state rival KU last weekend, Sweeney said he is looking for his team to be just as successful this weekend.

"Our experienced girls know the course very well," he said.

We must race well but there should be no reason why we are not in the top echelon of teams."

K-State has a history of success at the Southern IRAs, as multiple teams have qualified for their respective finals in each of the last four years.

The first and second varsity teams took third place at last year's event, and novice teams both won the gold.

The two-day event will take place at Melton Hill Lake.

Baseball team to play Tech

Looking to put an end to its road woes, the K-State baseball team will travel to Lubbock, Texas, for a three-game Big 12 Conference series against Texas Tech, beginning 6:30 p.m. Friday at Dan Law Field. Both teams are coming off disappointing series last weekend, as Baylor took two-of-three from K-State in Manhattan, while Texas Tech was swept by Kansas in Lawrence.

The Wildcats defeated then-No. 30 Baylor last Friday 6-1, but dropped back-to-back games on Saturday and Sunday by scores of 5-4 and 3-0, respectively. K-State then traveled to Omaha, Neb., to take on Creighton in historic Rosenblatt Stadium, but lost a heartbreaker in 11 innings, 6-5. K-State enters the contest having lost seven of its last eight games.

Texas Tech is also struggling entering the weekend series as the Red Raiders have dropped nine of their last 10 games.

Professor lives up to childhood dreams, sort of

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

Krista Walton, assistant professor of chemical engineering, synthesizes metal organic materials in one of the chemical engineering labs in Durland Hall.

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Krista Walton dreamt of outer space as a child as she attended space camp at the U.S. Space and Rocket Center in Huntsville, Ala.

"Originally, I wanted to be an astronaut," said Walton, assistant professor of chemical engineering. "I thought that was the most exciting job that anybody could ever do."

During junior high and high school, Walton participated in the Science Olympiad and developed a love for chemistry. After a high-school chemistry teacher introduced her to chemical engineering, Walton said she planned a career in chemical engineering – all before she started her senior year of high school.

Walton, 31, started her work on a NASA-related project one month after she received her bachelor's degree in 2000. As a doctoral student at Vanderbilt University, she helped develop a separation device that would serve as a larger system to help produce oxygen on Mars.

The project, called Mars In-Situ Resource Utilization, involved using existing resources on Mars to avoid bringing additional materials while traveling there.

"You can imagine flying on a trip to Mars that takes nine months or a year-and-a-half – that's going to cost a lot to try to haul a bunch of fuel and even oxygen to breathe," Walton said.

Because the Mars atmosphere is composed of primarily carbon dioxide, Walton said she and other researchers had a chemical process that converted the carbon dioxide to oxygen using an electrolysis cell.

Walton and other researchers developed an adsorption-based separation system that made the process more efficient, she said. Adsorption is the accumulation of a gas or liquid solute on the surface of a solid, which forms a molecular or atomic film, Walton said.

"So, when you would produce the oxygen, you would have – as a byproduct – carbon monoxide and then there would be some unreacted carbon dioxide as well," she said. "The idea would be to get the carbon dioxide and the carbon monoxide separated from each other; the carbon monoxide could be used for something else and the carbon dioxide would be recycled back into the system."

Walton received her first faculty position in October 2006 at K-State after she served as a postdoctoral fellow at Northwestern University. Though she had no family members in Kansas, Walton said she knew she would have success with her academic career at K-State.

"I knew there would be various opportunities for developing research collaborations with faculty in the department and around the university," Walton said. "Also, the size of the department is small enough so you can get to know all of the students. It just felt like a really nice place to be."

In comparison with her previous university affiliations, Walton said K-State faculty members make strong connections with undergraduate students.

"I've been so impressed with how the alumni like to come back and visit," Walton said. "They're really supportive of the department, and you do not see that kind of level of involvement at every university."

With her K-State research group, Walton has several federally funded agency projects from the National Science Foundation and the Department of Defense and the Army Research Office.

As a female engineer, Walton said she didn't notice any comments about her gender until she started looking for faculty positions – she said she often received comments about the effect her career as a woman professor would have if she decided to start a family.

"You're sort of sometimes made to feel like that you're not really supposed to try to do both things," Walton said. "You can be really good at one or really good at the other, but it might be difficult to try to do both."

Bill requires schools to ban cyberbullying

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius signed a bill last week that will require schools to prohibit bullying on school property, including cyberbullying.

SEBELIUS

Cyberbullying is "sending or posting harmful or cruel text or images using the Internet or other digital communication devices," according to the Center for Safe and Responsible Internet Use Web site.

Many schools have anti-bullying policies, but with changes in technology, schools need to implement new policies, said Nicole Corcoran, press secretary for Sebelius.

"The dynamic of schools have changed. Children interact in ways that were unavailable a generation ago," Sebelius said in a media release. "As more students stay after school to participate in activities or use the Internet to communicate with one another, it's important that every child feels safe and secure."

Sebelius signed House Bill 2758 on April 11, but Corcoran said the bill will not take effect immediately.

"Since the statute book is published in July, the law will be in effect for the upcoming school year," Corcoran said.

Individual school policies will depend on each district, she said. Schools must implement policies to cover cyberbullying on school computers.

Seth Galitzer, system administrator for the Department of Computing and Information Sciences at K-State, said he thinks many schools will at least block Web sites like Facebook.com and MySpace.com on their school computers. He said they also will likely block instant messaging on the computers, if they're not doing that already.

"That doesn't solve the problem of the kids going home and writing on blogs, but the schools don't have a lot of power on what the kids do at home," Galitzer said. "Technically, that's about the limits of what they can do as far as the IT staff."

Galitzer said he has children in grade school in the Manhattan district, and they are learning about anti-bullying. He said he doesn't know if they know about cyberbullying, but he said the school district is at least teaching students how to deal with bullies in general.

Exhibit displays power of tornadoes

The Manhattan Public Library has an exhibit about tornadoes and natural disasters. Part of the exhibit includes a plank from a barn that was impaled by a piece of debris from to a tornado.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students and Manhattan residents have an opportunity to view the raw power of tornadoes at the Manhattan Public Library this month.

The library is featuring a traveling exhibit called "Kansas Tornado," which opened March 28 and will close May 2. The exhibit is an assortment of pictures and information that highlight tornadoes that have ravaged the Kansas landscape.

One of the photos shows a leveled Lawrence. The photo, taken after a tornado struck Lawrence on April 12, 1911, is accompanied by a quotation from the Kansas City Star that reads, "The streets of Lawrence were littered with the debris from the storm. More than 40 houses were wrecked, 30 of them almost completely."

"[Tornadoes] have awesome destructive nature," said Mary Newkirk, reference librarian at the library.

She said the exhibit, which was created by the Kansas State Historical Society, has already drawn much attention.

Caroline Sweeney, junior in public relations, said she has witnessed what tornadoes can do.

"I was in Minnesota for a summer, and we saw a tornado jump across a lake," she said. "The tornado destroyed the cabins we were staying in."

Sweeney was uninjured, though, and said she has no problem with the storms now.

"I love tornado weather," she said.

Kansas has been linked to these storms for years. One of the most memorable was an extremely powerful EF5 tornado, which ripped through Greensburg, Kan., last May, killing nine people. Experts estimate as much as 90 to 95 percent of Greensburg was destroyed.

According to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, 1,095 tornadoes touched down in the U.S. in 2007, killing 81 people.

The National Severe Storms Laboratory reports tornadoes can have winds that reach 250 mph. Even with their high-speed winds, tornadoes typically destroy man-made objects with the debris they fling at high velocities, not the wind itself.

IDOL | Kappa Kappa Gamma member wins Greek Idol event

Mallory Davis, won Greek Idol with her performance, singing "When You Believe" from "The Prince of Egypt".

"She was just phenomenal – I've heard her voice before, and it was really exciting to see everyone supporting her today," Leisy said.

Davis, sophomore in pre-professional elementary education, said she heard about Greek Idol at the beginning of the year through her sorority.

At first she didn't plan on doing it, but she was later encouraged to audition by her members of her sorority.

"She said 'you might as well just try it out', so I did," she explained.

Davis said she was nervous before she got on stage, but soon got excited once she began performing.

She encouraged students who might be interested to participate in Greek Idol next year.

"I had no experience and no real knowledge on what it would be like and it was really fun," she said. "I'm glad I did it, so definitely go out for it if you've never done it."

Student Affairs Director – Melanie Peele, sophomore in pre-professional secondary education

Technology Coordinator – Tim Weninger, graduate student in computer science

Director of Sustainability – Michael Bell, senior in architectural engineering

During the directors' reports period the new student body president of K-State Salina, Jon McLelland, sophomore in professional pilot, said he was "totally stoked" about working with Student Governing Association during the coming year.

Bill Muir, faculty senate representative, led the Student Senate in singing "Happy Birthday" to Lydia Peele, whose birthday is Saturday.

When Capt. Meyer returned home, her husband wasn't back yet, and she was faced with reuniting with the children by herself.

"Our son, Crispin, went right to his mother because he remembered her, but our daughter, Savanna, didn't remember her," Meyer said. "It took about 24 hours before she would go to her mom, but it was her brother who finally convinced her that their mom was all right."

Meyer taught his son to salute the flag and say "hooah" while his mom was gone.

Saluting was a way Meyer said he found to bond with his son and help his son connect with his mom. His daughter has also started to salute the flag.

"Deployments are very hard on young families. It's a rough time, and if you aren't stubborn enough, you won't make it," Meyer said. "I'm very stubborn."

NIGHT | March ends in City Park with music inside dry pavilion

Abente, who is also a member of Ordinary Women, the campus feminist club that sponsors TBTN every year.

Clark spoke about a male's perspective of the night. Under the principles of TBTN, men are allowed to cheer on the women, but might not actually march with them. Several men were in attendance before and after the march.

"His speech was amazing and empowering," said Erica Starns, junior in family studies and human services. "It's wonderful that there are men who want the same thing for women that women do."

Roshanravan is the faculty adviser for Ordinary Women and said that, despite the rain, she was pleased with the turnout.

"Any time you get people together to talk about hope for the future it's an amazing experience, whether you have 10 or 10,000 people in attendance," Roshanravan said.

Musicians Jessie Freyermuth and Fashionably Late also played in the City Mark Pavilion, which shielded the bands and crowd from heavy drizzle. Kate Boysen, president of Ordinary Women, said the pavilion created a more comfortable environment for attendees.

"It's a more intimate atmosphere where people can browse at the Clothesline Project and still listen to music," said Boysen, senior in Spanish and sociology.

The Clothesline Project was a presentation of T-shirts that women drew statements on about how they, or other women, were affected by sexual assault. The shirts symbolized female personal expression that is absent from clotheslines' traditional settings.

"Take Back the Night" featured several frank and eye-catching signs about problems that women face today. A large group of mostly women marched from the middle of campus to City Park in the rain.

Margaret Pendelton, sophomore in public relations, attended last year's TBTN, and said the message was still as powerful.

"I love seeing the inspiration on everyone's faces. I hope everyone can leave feeling just as empowered as they do now, and use that to be a voice for those without one," Pendelton said.

Mary Todd, director of the K-State Women's Center, explained the importance of the event in Manhattan.

"If OW didn't do 'Take Back the Night,' there would be a hole in the heart of the campus," Todd said. "When women can sleep with their windows open on a breezy Saturday night, they will be in a safe place. I'm still looking for that safe place."

Hemp for all

Several common products are made from illegal plant

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A walk through any supermarket can reveal the product diversity of common, everyday materials. Cotton, plastic, rubber – you name it, Wal-Mart has it.

However, in today's climate of environmental concern, many shoppers are worried that many of these materials will do more harm than good. For a growing number of these individuals, the answer is hemp.

Hemp is derived from a relative of the marijuana plant, not marijuana itself, said Megan Stutheit, employee at On The Wild Side in Aggieville.

Some of the hemp products offered at On the Wild Side, include soap, shampoo, lotion, body spray, massage oil, clothing and jewelry.

"Customers can make their own hemp jewelry, or we will custom-make it for them," Stutheit said.

The most popular hemp products sold in the store are jewelry and lotion, she said.

"Hemp grows shorter than weed does," Stutheit said. "One of the benefits of hemp is that it is not paper. It can be grown twice a year and harvested, while a tree can take 40 years to grow."

Kay Fritz, also an On the Wild Side employee, said hemp is illegal to grow in the United States because of its similarity to marijuana, but is actually imported for use by the Navy for rope because of its durability.

"The government used to encourage farmers to grow hemp before it became illegal," Fritz said. "They used it for the rope on the first United States flag. It's simply because of the stigma of marijuana use that it is illegal, but you can't smoke hemp. There is no tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) in it."

Fritz said she used to live on a farm where hemp grew wild, which is why she believes it would make such a good alternative material for many products.

Some students are realizing the benefits of hemp products as well, not only for the environmental aspect, but because of its quality.

"A friend told me about this hemp body lotion she uses and said it worked really nicely, so I tried some," said Angela Schmitt, junior in social work. "It's supposed to be a skin-firming bronzer."

Schmitt said she has been using the hemp lotion for a week and believes it is working.

"It smells delicious, and it is definitely bronzing," she said.

HEMP FACTS

Hemp is the world's strongest natural fiber. It has been used to make cloth and rope for over 10,000 years. Hemp was the first crop ever cultivated for textile production.

The original Levi Strauss jeans were made from a hempen canvas.

Hemp can be used to make virtually anything that is currently made of cotton, timber, or petroleum.

George Washington and Thomas Jefferson both grew hemp. Ben Franklin owned a mill that made hemp paper. Thomas Jefferson drafted the Declaration of Independence on hemp paper. Until 1883, more than 75% of the world's paper was made with hemp fiber.

In 1941 the Ford motor company produced an experimental automobile with a plastic body composed of 70% cellulose fibers from hemp. The car body could absorb blows 10 times as great as steel without denting. The car was designed to run on hemp fuel. Because of the ban on both hemp and alcohol the car was never mass produced

Trees take approximately 20 years to mature - hemp takes 4 months. Paper made from hemp lasts for centuries, compared to 25-80 years for paper made from wood pulp.

Today industrial hemp is cultivated in Canada, China, Russia, Hungary, Germany, the Netherlands, France, Spain, England, Poland and many other Eastern European countries.

Jewelry and candles are two products made out of dried hemp and hemp oil. One can find an assortment of hemp products like clothing, shoes, jeans and tires. The Gutenberg Bible and the first drafts of the Declaration of Independence were printed on hemp paper, and the first American flag was made out of hemp fiber.

GAME REVIEW

Game add-ons should be free

BRANDON STEINERT

When a gamer makes a purchase, he or she might expect it to be a one-time payment, but more and more developers are finding ways to squeeze a few extra dollars out of their fan-base.

It could be an action figure of a favorite game hero or an epic soundtrack CD of songs played at crucial times during a game. All of these products are fine; in fact, they're a service to collectors and extreme fans, but making gamers pay for additions to a game that could have been included on the original disc is just plain shameless. To charge for an online gaming service is understandable; otherwise you wind up with Playstation's online service.

The variety map pack for Call of Duty 4 was released this month, and four new maps for Halo 3 came out in December 2007. I paid for both, amounting to about $20. Add that to the $60 per game – or more if the buyer gets the "special edition" or the "limited collector's edition" – and it can add up quickly. It shouldn't have to.

That's right, new multiplayer maps should be free. They're great for helping a game gain replay value, which is better for the developer because it improves its reputation; they should have to pay, not the gamer.

People get excited about new maps, buying into hype built up by the video game industry. They're definitely worth the few bucks it takes to download them, but it's essentially the modern version of "insert (2) coins to continue."

WILL FERRELL'S SITE, FUNNYORDIE.COM, CELBRATES 1 YEAR ANNY

FunnyOrDie.com, the Web site started by Will Ferrell and Adam McKay, is 1 year old. Its biggest star, Pearl, is 3.

In the clip, "Landlord," Will Ferrell he was upstaged by Pearl. It was the site's first video.

The comedy site is celebrating its anniversary with a video posted Wednesday of its stars wishing Funny or Die a happy birthday.

Among the many making cameos were Pearl, McKay's toddler daughter who became a star in her own right in the site's first video: "The Landlord," with more than 55 million views.

In just a year, Funny or Die has expanded to become a repository of professional content created by many top comedians, including Judd Apatow, Jack McBrayer ("30 Rock") and the comedy troupe Human Giant. Their videos are mixed with (the less popular) viewer-submitted videos, which can remain on the site if they are rated highly enough.

Pearl isn't coming out of "baby retirement," as was announced at the end of her last video, "Good Cop, Baby Cop." McKay says he'd prefer to keep it out of the spotlight, but figured a little birthday wish was harmless enough.

"It's sort of like when a professional boxer fights a professional wrestler," McKay told the Associated Press. "It's not really a sanctioned bout."

MOVIE REVIEW

Newest Apatow movie hard to forget, despite lack of modesty

"Forgetting Sarah Marshall"

Review by Alex Peak

Apparently, I don't give romantic comedies enough credit. Usually, they seem to follow the predictable pattern of boy meets girl, they hook up, have a fight, break up and get back together. But that's not the case for "Forgetting Sarah Marshall."

This movie, featuring the talented bandwagon from "Knocked Up" and "The 40-Year-Old Virgin," involves a lot of twists, too many painful crying scenes, raunchy sex, Hawaiian culture, tons of bare penis shots and overall hilarity.

Written by and starring Jason Segel ("Freaks and Geeks" alum), the movie is rumored to be inspired by a true story. Segel's character, Peter Bretter, is a struggling musician who does the background music for his girlfriend's (Sarah Marshall) TV show. His apartment is a pile of sheet music, Fruit Loops and puppets. More than anything, Segel wants to produce a musical puppet show about Dracula.

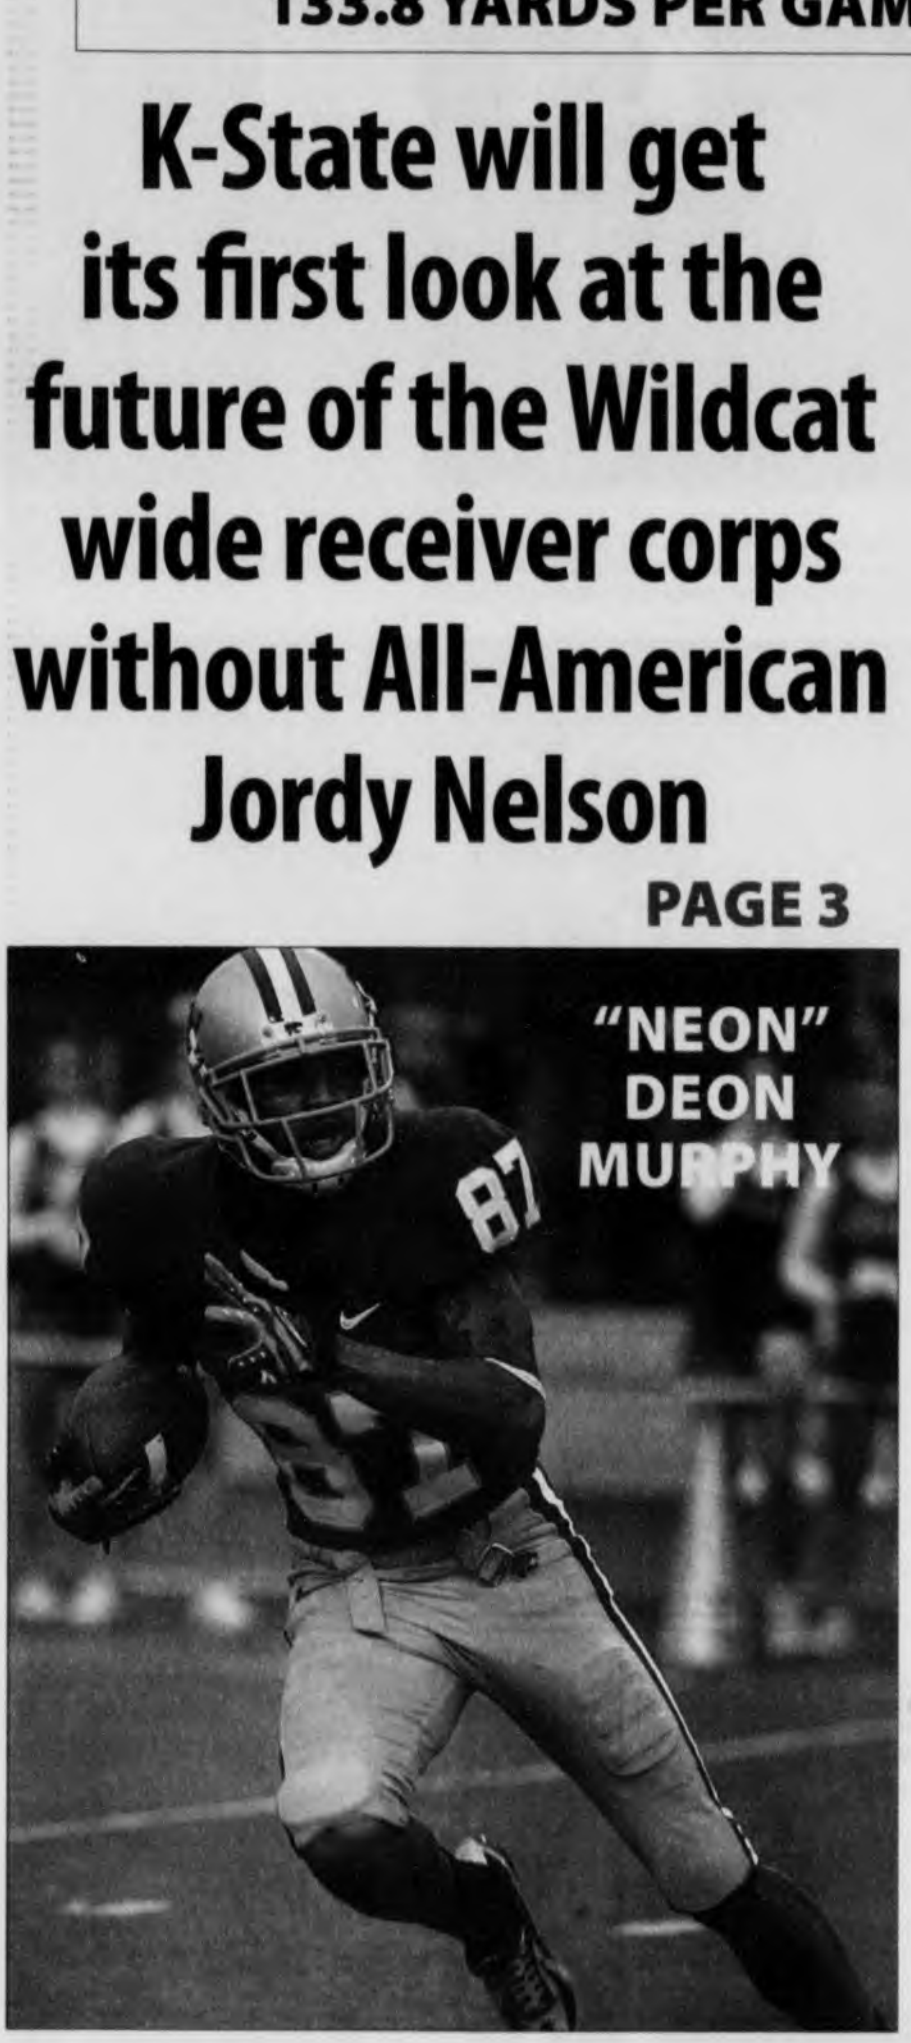
Sarah (Kristen Bell), a famous TV actress, has been with Peter for several years, but ends the relationship abruptly by saying the couple is growing in different directions. Slowly but surely, an awkward naked scene from Peter follows and she confesses to having another lover.

After a quick and bitter breakup from his long-term girlfriend, Peter does the most logical thing: take an impulse vacation to Hawaii to distract his broken heart. Go figure – Sarah happens to be staying at the same hotel in Oahu with her new beau singer/narcissist Aldous Snow (Russell Brand).

Peter spends the first few hours of his vacation wailing in his hotel suite. However, he soon finds allies at the hotel, including a newlywed Christian couple, an attractive resort employee (Mila Kunis), a bartender, a waiter and a breakfast buffet attendant.

The theme and characters here are very different from "Knocked Up" or "The 40-Year-Old Virgin." There's a milder dose of pothead tagalongs, and the supporting actors are exponentially stronger than those in previously mentioned movies.

With an ensemble of wack-job friends, Peter's love interest (Kunis) – a sexy resort employee – is able to shine in her role. Her lax demeanor and kindness win over Peter and his impaired heart.



This movie has some painfully funny moments (literally – your stomach will hurt from laughing), and as long as you're not expecting anything wholesome, you'll be entertained.

Life after Jordy

Wide receivers move on after loss of All-American

By Justin Nutter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the Wildcats take the field for Saturday's Spring Game, fans will get their first glimpses at a group of wide receivers who are all faced with the same burning question:

Who is capable of replacing Jordy Nelson?

"Everyone's after that No. 1 spot now that Jordy's gone," said junior Cedric Wilson. "Everybody wants it. There's been a lot of competition."

Wilson, who appeared in all 12 games last season, said replacing Nelson is just like replacing any other senior.

"It's just like every other year," he said. "We've just got to make the best with what we have and go from there."

Ernie Pierce, another senior on the team, said he is using his strong performance at the end of last season as motivation.

"The thought of being able to make plays in front of a big crowd and on national television makes you want to work harder in practice and in off-season training," he said.

Pierce, who caught a touchdown pass in both of the final two games last season, said he doesn't want those experiences to be his last.

"I want that to happen again," he said. "Everybody wants that glory."

Coach Ron Prince said Pierce's size and experience Should help him this season.

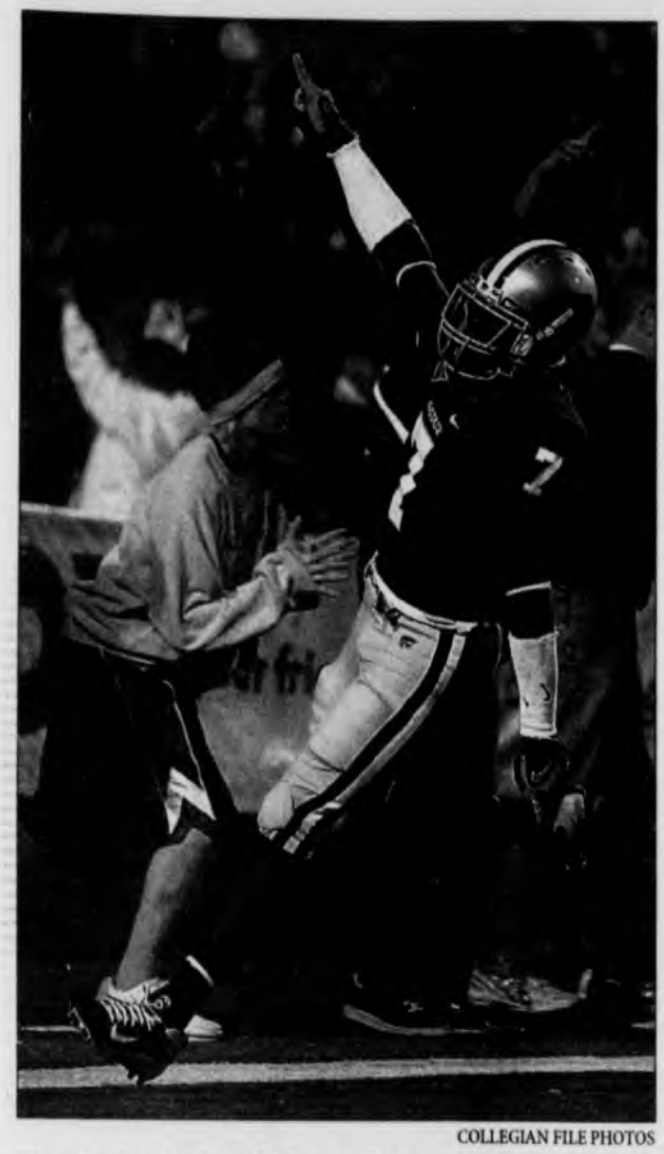
"I think any senior on this team should have a pretty significant impact on the team," Prince said. "He's done a really good job here of late. He has a terrific body. He's a big receiver, and those guys are hard to find."

With junior Deon Murphy, who was second behind Nelson in receiving yards and touchdown catches last season, sidelined the top receiver spot is up for grabs. Prince commented on the status of Murphy, who is not practicing because of inadequate performance in the classroom.

"We're trying to prevent life without Deon right now," he said. "We're trying to make sure that he can meet all his obligations and leave this institution with a degree."

Prince said when it comes to grades, he is equally as stern with the rest of team.

"I have that expectation of every player. Most of these guys will tell you that when it comes to academics, I'm not messing around."

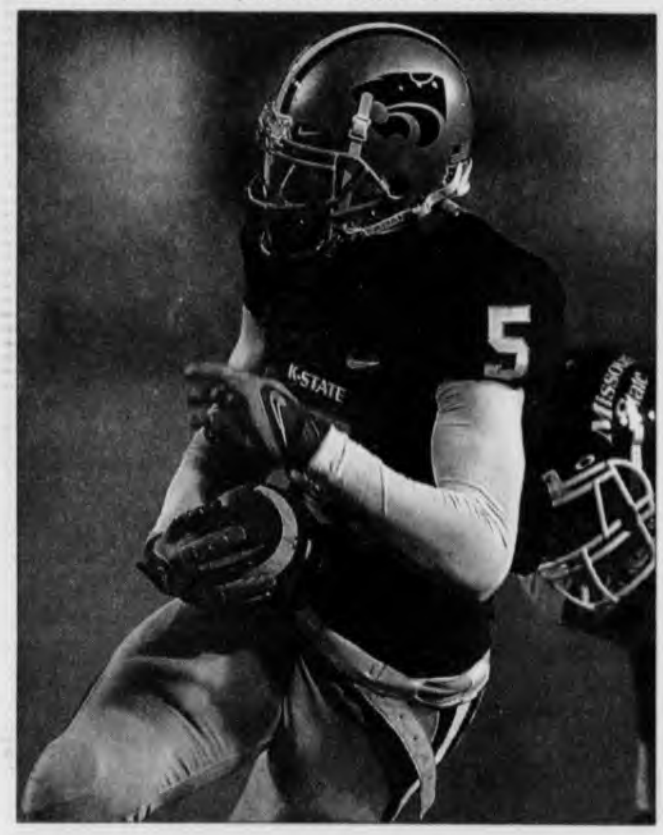


There are several other Wildcat receivers who will look to make an immediate contribution this season. Other notable returnees include sophomore Lamark Brown, who saw action in eight games as a true freshman, and senior Tony Purvis, who has six career appearances as a Wildcat. Top newcomers include junior college transfer Adrian Hilburn, rated the fifth-best junior college receiver prospect by Rivals.com, and fellow junior college transfer Aubrey Quarles, a 6-foot-2, 190-pound prospect from Santa Rosa Junior College in Santa Rosa, Calif.

With plenty of depth and experience, the entire receiving corps appears to be ready to make a strong contribution to the Wildcats' offense this season. Prince said a strong overall performance from the unit has made it difficult to decide who will fill the top spots on the depth chart.

"To this point, I have no idea," he said. "I think they're all doing a really good job. I'm real impressed with them as a group."

Wilson said regardless of who comes out on top, the receiving unit will give K-State fans something to look forward to this year.



"It's for everyone's eyes to see when the time comes," he said. "It will definitely be a lot of fun."

New faces on the sideline

3 new coaches together bring 50 years of experience to the K-State football team

By Brad Dornes
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There have been three key additions to the K-State football team during this off season, but not a single one of them will see a minute of playing time.

Coach Ron Prince announced earlier this spring the hiring of three assistant coaches to his staff: Warren Ruggiero, quarterbacks coach; Cornell Jackson, linebackers coach; and Jeff Rodgers, special teams coordinator.

Ruggiero brings his 20 years of coaching experience to K-State, and will look to begin tutoring Josh Freeman and the rest of the Wildcat quarterbacks.

Ruggiero spent the last two seasons as the offensive coordinator and quarterbacks coach at Elon University, a member of the NCAA Division I Football Championship Subdivison (formally I-AA), where he mentored Phoenix quarterback Scott Riddle. With Ruggiero's guidance, Riddle was named the 2007 College Sporting News National Freshman of the year.

Before arriving at Elon, Ruggiero spent the previous six years at Hofstra University.

"Warren has basically became Josh's personal caddy," Prince said. "He has been mentoring him every step of the way, and I don't know if anyone is better than Ruggiero."

Jackson enters his first year as the Wildcat linebackers coach and returns to the state where his coaching career began.

JACKSON

Jackson's first coaching job was as the running backs coach at Butler Community College in 1987, and he has been coaching at the collegiate level ever since.

During his 20-year career, he has spent time at schools like Utah State, New Mexico and Arizona State.

Jackson comes to K-State with nearly 10 years of experience of coaching linebackers and spent last year as an assistant coach at Baylor.

"Cornell has been absolutely great so far, and our guys are really benefiting from having him around," Prince said. "His unique experience contributes to his great working ability."

Rodgers comes to K-State by way of the NFL, where he spent the last five seasons with the San Francisco 49ers as the assistant special teams coach.

The 49ers, with Rodgers, led the NFC and were second in the NFL in net punting. San Francisco also led the NFL in kick-off coverage by forcing their opponents to an average starting position at their own 25-yard line.

Rodgers spent two years at the University of Arizona as a coach on defense before making the jump to the NFL coaching ranks.

"With Jeff in charge of the special teams, we have really discovered something," Prince said. "His techniques are eye opening and very effective."

Prince said, overall, he is happy with the decisions he's made and the coaches' performances up to this point.

"I am real pleased with each one of them," he said. "They each have their own techniques and style."

Fresh faces on defense should lead to '08 revival

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Defensive back Antwon Moore was injured during last year's San Jose State game. Moore had already had four unassisted tackles and two sacks through the first two games of the season.

TYLER SHARP

After an utterly abysmal season by the group formerly known as the "lynch mob," there is hope for a return to the great times of the Wildcats' imposing defense.

Among the returnees that will look to again make a big effect is linebacker Antwon Moore. Moore was lost for the season after the team's first home game against San Jose State on Sept. 10, 2007. Through his action in one and a half games, Moore already had registered five tackles, including two tackles for a loss and two sacks.

In an article on GoPowercat.com, Tibesar spoke about what Moore will bring back to the defense.

"Antwon can certainly bring a sizzle as people saw in the first two games," Tibesar said. "To have him back and the speed that he brings onto the field will be a great addition."

In the defensive coaching ranks, there has been a rare amount of continuity in the coaching staff. Tibesar returns for his second year as coordinator and third year on staff. Defensive line coach Mo Latimore is entering his 15th consecutive year on staff and is in his 23rd year at K-State.

The lone new addition is linebacker coach Cornell Jackson. While his last coaching job was as a running backs coach, Cornell has coached linebackers and defensive backs at the college level.

One of the Wildcats' two four-star recruits, linebacker Ulla Pomele, already is practicing with the team and will be in the mix for playing time and potential starts. Four-star defensive tackle Daniel Calvin and three-star linebacker Hansen Sekona will add much-needed firepower to a unit lacking the heart of past units. A GoPowercat.com article compared film of Sekona to that of former Wildcat great Mark Simoneau.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Linebacker Ulla Pomele is one of the highlights of this season's recruits. Pomele comes to K-State from Santa Rosa (Calif.) Junior College, where he was highlighted as a four-star recruit.

Another spring arrival looking to make an immediate impression is defensive back Blair Irvin of Coffeyville (Kan.) Community College. Irvin's film shows he has good vision and a strong ability to figure out where the ball is on the field. He also displays great speed and skills that make him a likely candidate to take on some responsibilities in the return game.

Cornerback Billy McClellan, a Wilmington, Calif., product, boasts a time of 4.4 seconds in the 40-yard dash and will likely see time as well. Finally, linebacker Olu Hall, a transfer from Virginia, already appears to be continuing his solid play at his past colleges. At Virginia and Hargrave Military Academy (Va.), Hall put himself among the elite at his position and from early practice reports he appears to be doing the same at K-State.

With the array of talent dotting the Wildcats' depth chart this summer and fall, improvement is on the way. A line-up complete with senior Ian Campbell, Moore, senior linebacker Justin Roland, the 2008 recruiting class and more only will lead to improvements.

Before the 2007 season, the thought of the K-State defense giving up 73 points and 702 yards had been nearly forgotten about. With the new personnel, coaches of new and old, and familiar faces populating the landscape of K-State football. Good times will soon be here again.

New additions to coaching staff, roster add spice to Spring Game

There is no shortage of reasons to be excited for Saturday's Purple and White spring football game.

JOEL ASCHBRENNER

Three new coaches will command the sidelines for the Wildcats. Cornell Jackson will take over the linebackers, Warren Ruggiero will coach the quarterbacks, and Jeff Rodgers will coordinate the special teams.

With seven transfer players on to the team, the Wildcats will have a new look on the field as well. Six players enrolled at K-State in January after graduating from junior colleges, and have been practicing with the team all spring.

Sophomore linebacker Olu Hall transferred to K-State last year from Virginia but was unable to join the Wildcats on the field because of NCAA transfer rules. Hall has been anointed as the player to watch this spring by many, including former All-America wide receiver Jordy Nelson, who got a look at Hall's talent on the scout team defense last year.

Senior Ian Campbell's switch back to defensive end after playing outside linebacker and the search for players to replace Nelson's production will be other interesting stories to watch unfold Saturday.

Despite all these interesting storylines to follow during Saturday's game, it will still be just a scrimmage. While it's always great to see the Wildcats take the field, the spring game can be sloppy and uninspiring. So why get excited for an exhibition game? Tailgating.

Saturday isn't just an exhibition for the players; it's the fans' first chance of the year to tailgate. Not only does Saturday mark the first big tailgate of 2008, but it also provides one of the best tailgates of the year. The beauty of the Spring Game is the Wildcats always win, which can make for a fun and relaxing day.

With a 6:30 p.m. kickoff, tailgating will be an all-day affair. Weather forecasts are predicting a partially sunny day with temperatures reaching 70 degrees, making Saturday a near-perfect day for a tailgate.

The parking lots outside of Snyder Family Stadium will be free and open to the public all day, according to the athletic department. Unlike normal football games when the parking lots are reserved, students will get to set up camp right in front of the stadium instead of in the adjacent fields.

And even if you do feel the need to leave your lawn chair at some point in the day, there is plenty to do. The third-annual Spring Game Fan Fest kicked off Thursday and runs through Saturday. The KSU Wildcat barbecue contest opens Saturday at 7 a.m. and will be judged at 12:30 p.m. in Cat Town.

The Ottaway Carnival, in the east parking lot, will be open Saturday from noon to 5:30 p.m. and again from 8 p.m. to midnight. The K-State Superstore is having a sale from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m., just in case you run out of purple.

All the elements for a long and successful day of tailgating will be present tomorrow, outside of Snyder Family Stadium. So go wipe the slime out of the bottom of your cooler, assemble that grill that you've been meaning to get out of the box and make that trip out to Orscheln hardware store to buy a set of washers, because tomorrow marks one of the best tailgating days of the year.

Early juco transfers hope to earn immediate playing time, bowl game

By Jose Garcia
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's mid-April, the chill of winter is still in the air and football is on the horizon.

Coach Ron Prince's obvious focus for next season's team is experience and maturity. By signing 19 junior college transfers in February, the coaching staff is hoping to replace the loss of many key starters, especially on the offensive side of the ball.

One of the biggest signings of this spring was a three-star recruit out of Butler County Community College, offensive tackle Wade Weibert. He said he is here and ready to meet the Division-1 level expectations, which, in his opinion, are just as high as those of the medias.

"The obvious goal would be to win every game, and becoming bowl eligible would be huge for all of us," Weibert, junior in business administration, said.

Last season, Weibert helped lead the Grizzlies to the 2007 NJCAA national championship with an unblemished record at 12-0. He was also a first team All-Jayhawk Conference, All-Region VI offensive lineman and an All-America selection.

One of the newcomers who could help fill the void of Jordy Nelson is Adrian Hilburn, a junior transfer from the Community College of San Francisco. Hilburn had 40 receptions last season to compliment 516 yards and three touchdowns. He also attended the same junior college as senior offensive lineman Alesana Alesana.

The offense was not the only spot on the team to receive some help. With three early signees on the defensive side of the ball, Prince's attempt to strengthen the inside core is evident.

A key early signee was junior cornerback Blair Irvin. He was a 12th-round draft pick in 2002 of the Tampa Bay Devil Rays baseball team. He was in the Devil Rays organization for four years before deciding to return to football in 2006. Irvin recorded 24 tackles with one interception last season at Coffeyville (Kan.) Community College.

The linebacker crew also got a bit deeper this offseason in signing transfer linebacker Hansen Sekona. Sekona was named first-team all Northern-California conference after totaling 71 tackles and two sacks in 10 games.

Ulla Pomele from Santa Rosa Junior College also signed with the linebacker corps was.

With only two and sometimes three years of eligibility left, Weibert said junior college transfers usually need to make immediate contributions.

"We are on scholarship, the coaches did not bring us here to sit the bench," Weibert said. "So making an impact right away is important, not only for us but for the team."

Student showmen to participate in Little American Royal in Weber

By Michlynn Rose
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Weber Arena will be filled with the sounds and smells of the Little American Royal on April 19. The Little American Royal is a showcase of students' showmanship skills with one of five farm animal species – beef cattle, dairy cattle, horses, sheep or pigs.

After a month of preparation with a university-owned animal, students will show off their skills for the judge and the public.

"You don't have to have any prior experience to show," said LAR President Andy Stickel, junior in animal sciences and industry and agricultural economics. "It is an opportunity to show different species, branch out a little bit and gain experience."

The LAR is named after the American Royal in Kansas City, Mo., and is put on by K-State's Block and Bridle and Dairy Science clubs, Stickel said.

LAR is run by a committee of four members, including Stickel. Michelle Sullivan, senior in animal sciences and industry, is the vice president; Billy Brown, junior in animal sciences and industry, serves as the treasure; and Lindsay Bowers, senior in animal sciences and industry, is the secretary.

"The other officers are just as involved as I am," Stickel said. "They have made my life a lot easier. They have done a ton."

Stickel said he has been involved in LAR planning science his first year of college. He said he was on the beef committee his freshman year and was elected to a two year LAR committee term last year.

Alison Lukert, junior in human resource management, marketing and general management, said she would compete in her third LAR on Saturday.

She said she decided to show in LAR because, "I have been showing sheep since I was seven years old through 4-H. This is a good way to continue showing since I'm too old to show in 4-H now."

Lukert said the knowledge and background of competing in showmanship and preparing an animal for the show ring has given her the opportunity to help other contestants, who have never shown before, get their animals ready.

Not only is she showing on Saturday, but she is also in charge of the arena perpetrations committee.

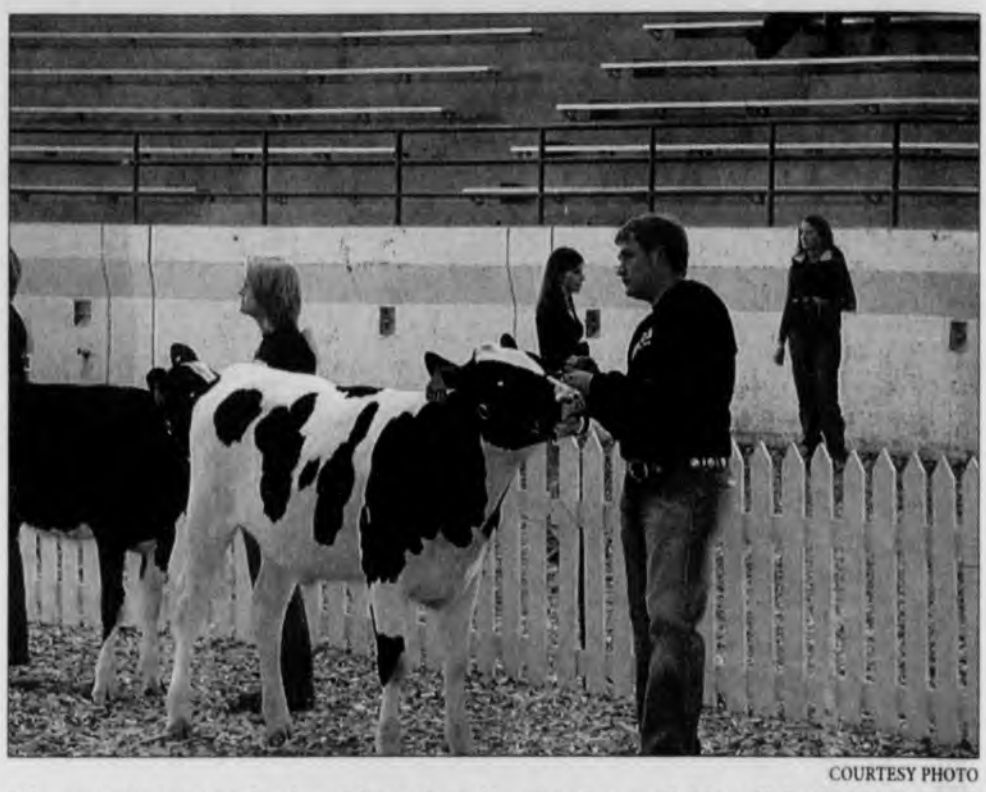
"I'm in charge of repainting all the signs that go in the arena, getting all the plants, and setting up the arena, basically the linguistics of the arena," she said.

Adam Hatesohl, LAR beef chairman and junior in animal sciences and industry, is in his first year as a leader but has had plenty of past experience to bring to the job.

"I have shown beef before and it has helped me be a better leader in several ways," he said. "First it has given me the experience in breaking calves so that I can assist the novice showmen with this process. Also showing has given me the experience in fitting cattle so that I can help any of the participants that need it."

Though Hatesohl said he has not shown in LAR, he decided to become a leader because he likes being a part of the show and making it better.

Jeff Stevenson, professor in animal sciences and industry and LAR adviser, said he teaches the Dairy Science and Poultry Lab classes and offers extra credit to students who fit and show a dairy heifer.



"A high percentage of students in the class don't come from a farm background and they are pre-vet students," he said. "This teaches them to halter, fit and show a calf and work with a large animal. Most students will tell you that it was the highlight of the class, because they got hands on experience and learned something they didn't know."

Stevenson said he is impressed by how well the students in charge organize themselves and run the contest. He said he has been an LAR adviser for more than 20 years along with David Nichols, professor of animal sciences and industry; and Scott Schaake, associate professor of animal sciences and industry, has been an adviser from more than 10 years.

Though LAR is put on to gain experience and have fun, the more serious competitors have awards to capture.

In each species, the champion showmen will receive a belt buckle and the second-place showmen will receive an embroider directors chair. The novice champion showmen will receive a ribbon. A novice showman is considered someone who is in their first year of showing that species.

A herdsman award will be given in each species. This contestant is selected by the species chairman and is someone who helps other constants and do an overall good job, Stickel said.

A former Little American Royal participant shows his university-owned dairy calf. Students can choose from five different farm animal species to show — beef cattle, dairy cattle, horses, sheep or pigs. Then the showmen must lead, groom and fit the animal for show.

There are two scholarships awarded to two LAR participants provided by LAR and the American Royal.

Lastly, there will be an award given to Clifford Spaeth, retired animal sciences and industry professor.

"Spaeth was selected as this years dedicatee by LAR members," Stickel said. "He was a faculty member who demonstrated great support for the university and the Little American Royal."

Weber Arena will be full of busy students and their prize winning animals on open house and participants encourage the public and students to come by for a peek of K-State's best.

"Open house goers should stop by Weber if they have never seen an event like this," Hatesohl said. "It is a great opportunity for people to see what showing cattle, pigs, sheep and horses are all about. They will have the opportunity to see some of K-State's best showmen displaying their skills and reaping the benefits of their hard work with their animals for the last month."

Parking Services prepares for possible parking options for Open House visitors

By Elise Nimtz
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though K-State's questionable parking situation is well known by students and faculty, the conflicts arising from the parking garage construction will become familiar to Open House visitors Saturday.

Parking Services has made specific recommendations for out-of-towners and Manhattan residents alike, suggesting parking lots, accessible parking spaces, shuttles and maps on campus for those in attendance Saturday.

Darwin Abbott, director of Parking Services, said the regular four weekday shuttles will run on the east and west sides of campus from 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. He said a large number of spaces will be available on the north and south ends, and some spaces open in the stadium parking lots as well.

"Although, with the carnival and things going on at the stadium, that will impact some of the parking," Abbott said.

Recommended places for parking include the east side of Bramlage Coliseum, the west side of Memorial Stadium, the Z parking lot north of the residence halls and the Beach Art Museum parking lots. For those familiar with the campus, any lots marked W, O, T or Z will be available for parking.

The excess traffic arising from Open House has been a consideration for activities at the K-State Student Union, especially because the parking garage construction has limited spaces in that area.

Nancy Thompson, office assistant for the biology department, said she will be bringing materials from Ackert Hall, and the heavy traffic at the Union could affect how smoothly set up goes.

"I can see where parking would be a problem," Thompson said. "It depends on if the circle drive (north of the Union) is very busy. I know people won't want to carry all their stuff to set up."

Abbott said the best mode of transportation is to use the shuttles. The shuttles run every 15 minutes and include routes from Bramlage Coliseum to the Union, as well as from the Derby Dinning Center parking lot to Anderson Hall. A Greek Affairs shuttle will run from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.; a Housing shuttle will run from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; and a Grain Science shuttle will run from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

College of Arts and Science plans variety of Open House events

By Michlynn Rose
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's largest college on campus is going to have a variety of activities for Open House attendees from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday around campus and at the K-State Student Union.

Some of the hot spots to hit around campus include the art department's demonstrations and displays in Willard Hall. Also in Willard, the chemistry department will feature glassblowing demonstrations from 10 a.m. to noon.

At 12:30 p.m. the history department will sponsor the Lecompton Reenactors in the quad between Waters Hall and Hale Library. The Lecompton Reenactors will perform "Bleeding Kansas," as they are dressed as civil war-era historical figures in full costume.

Attendees also will have the opportunity to learn how mutant beetles help in the fight against cancer from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in Chalmers Hall. Visitors can tour the Johnson Cancer Center research laboratory and learn what K-State faculty and students do to fight cancer.

The math department will hold an Olympiad from 9 a.m. to noon in Cardwell 101, and the physics department also will have activities taking place in Cardwell.

Just outside the Union in Bosco Student Plaza, the military science department will have a rock-climbing wall for Open House attendees to scale.

Inside the Union, departments from the College of Arts and Sciences will have tables, demonstrations and activities. Visitors can talk to faculty and students about how to get involved at K-State through the marching band, Wildcat 91.9, K-State dance and theater production and other opportunities.

The A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications will have live coverage of Open House on K-State TV, local cable channel 8.

Students who are looking for a major or a minor can check out the different departments' tables to learn about available options. People can stop by to learn something new, like how to say ones name in Japanese, take a mineral identification quiz, choose a favorite democratic presidential candidate or get help with a fitness program.

Open House chairwoman reflects on K-State memories, involvement

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Allison Mense said she has been a K-State fan probably since the second she was born.

Mense, junior in Spanish-secondary education and history, is the student coordinator on the All-University Open House Coordinating Committee. Both of Mense's parents and all of her aunts and uncles – with the exception of one aunt – attended K-State.

During her junior year in high school, Mense attended Open House, which had a "Fear Factor" theme. She said she can remember seeing students and faculty members eating worms and participating in other "Fear Factor"-related activities on Bosco Student Plaza.

"It looked really cool that the faculty and the students and the staff all got together – everyone looked like they were having a really good time," she said. "It really made me feel like K-State was a really fun place to be."

As student coordinator, Mense oversees the student committee, which includes categories like public relations, student life, special events and entertainment on Bosco Student Plaza and on the quad area between Hale Library and Waters Hall.

Mense is originally from Hoxie, Kan., a northwestern town with about 1,200 people. While she grew up an avid K-State fan, Mense said she looked into possibly attending other Kansas and out-of-state universities during high school.

However, Mense said she chose K-State because she felt safe at the university and would be able to develop many personal relationships.

"It just turned out that K-State offered the big town that I was looking for with the small-town atmosphere on campus, which was really homey to me being from a small town," she said. "I didn't want to be somewhere where I was just a number and it would be really hard for me to get involved."

Mense currently serves as Kappa Kappa Gamma president, and she served as the sorority's Panhellenic Council representative last year. Her other current and past activities include the All-University Homecoming Committee, Blue Key Senior Honorary, New Student Services tour guide and Quest Freshman Leadership Honorary.

She also has volunteered at St. Isadore's Catholic Student Center since her freshman year, and she tutors at Anthony Middle School.

Since February, Mense has spent about four or five hours each week sending e-mails, coordinating events and parking and sending out maps for Open House.

"Now, Open House is just kind of the thing that I work on all of the time, since it's so close," she said.

Since her freshman year, Mense has helped with Open House in providing campus tours and working as a "Lost?" volunteer – she said "Lost?" volunteers help families find specific buildings on campus throughout the day.

"I loved it – I think that's why I have such a passion for it now," Mense said with a smile. "It kind of was my first impression of K-State as a school, not just as a football game or a fun family get-together.

"I hope that everybody is bleeding purple by the time they're done."

College of Human Ecology to offer creative options for getting involved

By Michlynn Rose
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Human Ecology is encouraging students interested in learning how it transforms students into professionals to stop by Justin Hall on Saturday during Open House. The college offers many degree programs with careers that focus on people rather than objects.

Human Ecology has a variety of activities for open house goers of all ages to enjoy. Children can attend safari story time at 9:30 and 11:30 a.m. in Campus Creek Complex 223. They will listen to a story and make an animal mask to enjoy at home. The older children and adults can try their abilities at Reality Check, a game created by the School of Family Studies and Human Services. The game will challenge participants decision-making skills when encountered the animals of the jungle. It is located in Hoffman Lounge in Justin Hall.

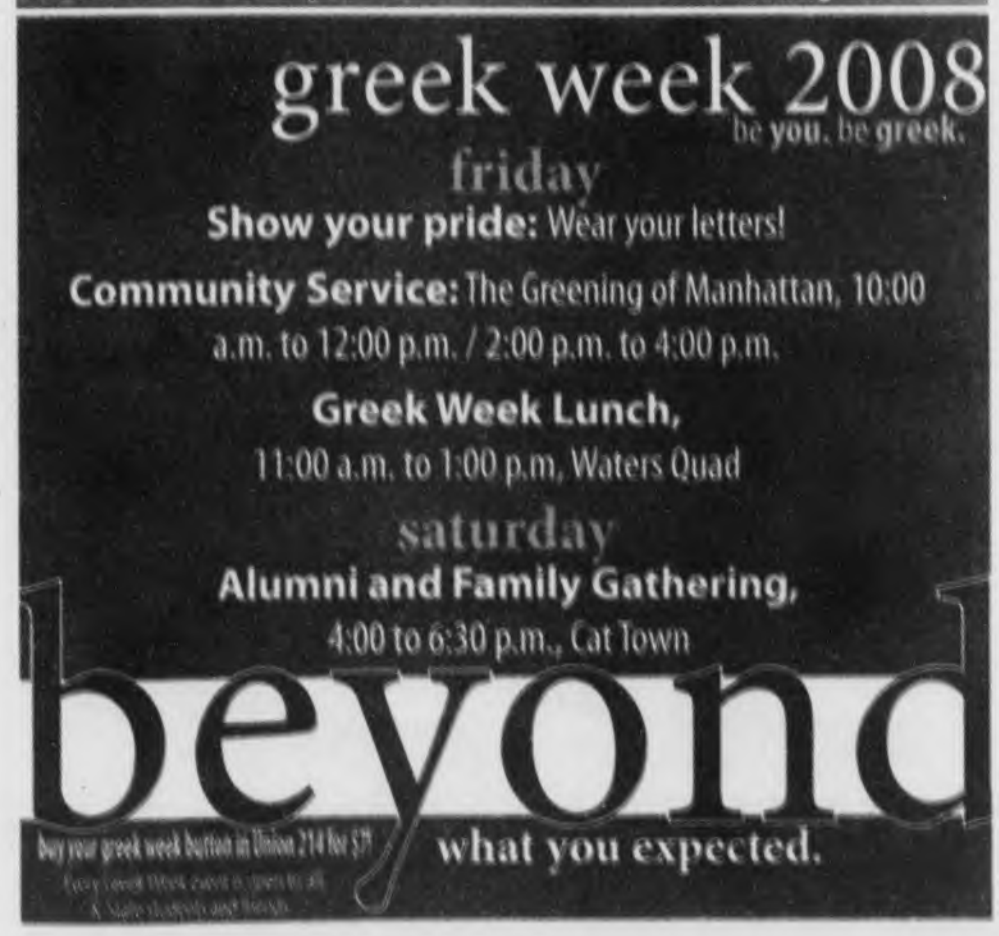
There also will be tote-bag-printing demonstrations throughout the day in the textile lab, Justin Hall 226. Receive a free hearing screening or voice-analysis screening by the students in the communication sciences and disorders program from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Campus Creek Complex.

Also, there will be a jungle-jamming fashion show at 10:30 a.m., noon and 1:30 p.m. in Hoffman Lounge. Hotel and Restaurant Management students will be making ice sculptures from 11 a.m. to noon and 1 to 2 p.m. on the patio outside Justin Hall. When participants become hungry, the Health and Nutrition Society will offer a variety of fruits and vegetables in Justin 146. They can also learn how to make healthy snack choices from family and consumer sciences education students in Justin Hall 150.

People can learn how to cook by purchasing a cookbook from the Student Dietetics Association in Hoffman Lounge.

Other lunch alternatives will be available at the open-air café outside Justin Hall from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Hotel and restaurant management students will be serving up some grilled hot dogs, chips, a cookie and Pepsi provided by Pepsi Cola of Manhattan.

Interior design students' projects will be displayed at 11:30 a.m. in Justin 327 so they can learn rendering techniques.



K-State's interior design program is ranked as one of the top four programs in the country. Students can also learn how to make decorative buttons out of vintage silk ties in Justin 350.

Spring Game Fan Fest much different than ones under coach Snyder

By Cole Manbeck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas State spring game used to be a day when the passionate fans would go out to Snyder Family Stadium, take their notebooks and scout who they thought would be major contributors in the upcoming season.

Retired coach Bill Snyder treated the game just like a practice, and there were generally less than 10,000 people in attendance, even though the Wildcats were a perennial powerhouse and enjoying considerable success.

The times have changed and coach Ron Prince has implemented a new strategy. Now, the game is just a little piece of the puzzle that is a weekend event that brings families and people of all ages out to the stadium, not just the die-hard fans.

When Prince came to K-State, this was one of the first adjustments he made in the program. He played the spring game up, labeling it the Spring Game Fan Fest, and said he wanted at least 20,000 people in Snyder Family Stadium. This number seemed much too optimistic and, perhaps, overwhelming to most Wildcat fans, considering the fact that the highest known attendance in past spring games was in 2001, when 18,421 purple-clad fans made their way through the stands, according to kstatesports.com.

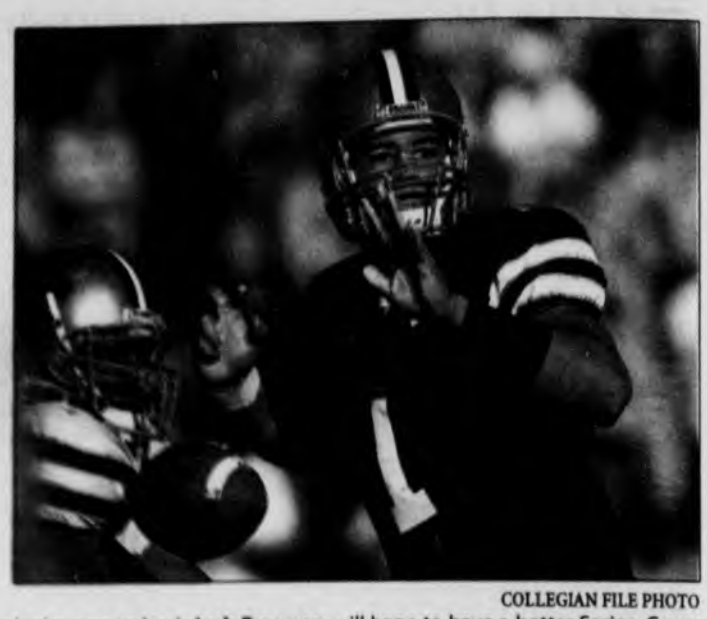
The Wildcat fans exceeded expectations by more than a thousand, bringing in a record-high 31,875, placing them in the top 20 of all Division I schools in 2006 spring game attendance.

The number was almost cut in half last year, when 16,732 made it to the game, which still ranks third in K-State history in spring games.

However, the number doesn't tell the whole truth. Many choose to not attend the game, but rather join in on all of the fun activities outside of the stadium.

The fun kicked off last night with the Ottaway Carnival in the east parking lot of Snyder Family Stadium. The carnival will continue Friday from 3 p.m. to midnight and Saturday from 12 p.m. to 5:30 p.m., stopping for the game, which kicks off at 6 p.m., and then will resume from 8 p.m. to midnight.

Another fun amenity for the kids is the Willie Fun Zone at the indoor football complex on Saturday from 3 p.m. to 5:30 p.m.



Other fan activities include the 24th annual Powercat Golf Tournament at Colbert Hills Golf Course on Friday.

K-State fans who need some gear for the upcoming season will have plenty of options for purple on Friday and Saturday with the K-State Super Store sale in the East parking lot of the stadium.

There will also be a barbeque contest Saturday for those looking to show off their cooking abilities.

A one-hour autograph session with the players and coaching staff will immediately follow the game.

The times have changed at K-State. The spring game is now a weekend packed with fun. There will be tailgating, partying, and for those die-hard fans – a little preview on the side for the upcoming football season.

Administrator's report higher Open House attendance

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The beautiful weather at K-State's All-University Open House reflected the success of the annual event, said campus administrators, who are calling it the most successful in recent years.

Throughout the day, prospective students and alumni toured campus exhibits and were exposed to aspects of campus life.

Allison Mense served as student coordinator of the All-University Open House Coordinating Committee, and she said she thought the day went well.

"Everything ran smoothly, and we didn't really have any glitches or anything," Mense, junior in secondary education, said. "It was a perfect day."

Mense said the actual attendance numbers haven't been released yet, but Pat Bosco, dean of student life; and Emily Lehning, assistant dean of student life, told her there were more people in attendance than in recent years. The normal attendance is around 20,000, Mense said.

Though they were few and far between, the biggest issue of the day rose from the cramped conditions in the K-State Student Union.

Mense said all of the booths were moved to the first floor so more people could see them.

"We had some booths on the second floor last year and there wasn't a lot of traffic up there," Mense said.

The most significant change was that the Spring Game was on the same day as Open House. Mense said it seemed to go well but it added another issue with parking.

The athletic department opened some lots around the football stadium, and those who parked near the stadium used the shuttle service to get to campus. The inflatables that are usually in front of the Union were moved to the football stadium and paired with Spring Game, Mense said.

Each respective department provided live entertainment during the day, including the Marching Cobras band, who performed for a large mass of people in Bosco Student Plaza.

Several bands also played in the Plaza, allowing visitors to hear some of Manhattan's local music.

Daniel Aguilar, doctoral student in sociology, played drums for the Ruckus and said the crowd, which was different from the usual crowd they play to at the bars, was receptive to their music.

"We play ska, and you could see the kids dancing and jumping around," Aguilar said. "It was more of a spontaneous reaction to our music."

Open House also gives alumni an opportunity to see how their campus has changed.

Jennifer Heiman, junior in sociology, led tours of Putnam Hall and came face to face with some of the alumni who had lived in the residence hall.

"We had a decent number of alumni who came through to see the changes in the halls," Heiman said. "They really enjoy it. They more or less just want to see how it has changed."

Man arrested on meth suspicion

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A 26-year-old man was arrested Thursday and charged for possessing and manufacturing methamphetamines, according Riley County Police Department press release.

RCPD arrested Bryce M. Williams near the corner of Winkler and of Crooked Creek roads in Leonardville, Kan., at about 6:30 p.m. for an outstanding warrant for failure to appear, according to the press release.

Williams resisted officers at the scene and was arrested and charged for this offense and for assaulting a law enforcement officer, according to the press release.

During Williams' arrest, officers had reason to suspect that he was involved with manufacturing methamphetamine.

After further investigations, Williams was arrested and charged for manufacturing methamphetamine, possession of methamphetamine with the intent to distribute, possession of drug paraphernalia and possession of a controlled substance.

Williams remained confined at the Riley County Jail as of Thursday. His bond was set at $58,600, according to the press release.

The case is still under investigation.

Experts discuss China's importance on global economy, relations

By Holly Campbell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Americans can expect China to become an increasingly important nation in world politics, including in the upcoming U.S. presidential election, speakers said Friday.

Two experts on China spoke about current U.S.-China issues – one through webcast and the other in person – Friday afternoon in Hale Library's Hemisphere Room.

The presentation, "China Town Hall: Local Connections, National Reflections," was part of a day of China-related programming that took place in 40 different locations nationwide. K-State's East Asian Studies Program and the National Committee for U.S.-China Relations sponsored K-State's China Town Hall. About 50 people attended the program.

Tiffany Lewis, senior in elementary education, said she attended the lecture because she has studied China in geography classes and wanted to learn more about Chinese politics and culture.

The program was presented under the belief that "sound, productive Sino-American relations serve vital American and world interests," said David Graff, associate professor of history, who introduced the lecturers.

Lewis said she thought China's position as a rising economic power heightens the need for cross-cultural understanding.

"They're really gaining in our economy right now, and they're becoming a major power, so I think it's important to learn more about their culture to better our relationship with them," Lewis said. "Being an American, I want to know who we're working with."

The first half of the program was a prerecorded talk by Norman Ornstein, resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute. The talk had been broadcast on the Internet the previous evening from Washington, D.C. Following the webcast was a live lecture and question-and-answer session by David Finkelstein, a Chinese military expert.

Ornstein focused on how Chinese issues could potentially play a large role in U.S. politics, including the upcoming presidential election. He said this is because of China's presence in the news related to lead in imported toys, conflicts in Tibet and the upcoming Beijing Olympics, among other subjects, he said.

China is a tempting target for politicians who want to prove they can be tough when it comes to international affairs, but calling for President Bush to boycott the upcoming Olympic opening ceremonies would be "foolish and counter-productive," Ornstein said.

Ultimately, Ornstein said he hoped members of Congress – not just the presidential candidates – would seriously work on addressing issues with China.

Finkelstein's lecture followed the webcast. Finkelstein, who traveled to Manhattan from Washington to participate in the China Town Hall event, is one of America's most prominent experts on the Chinese military, Graff said.

Matt Castro | COLLEGIAN

Two experts on China spoke about current U.S.-China issues during the China Town Hall on Friday afternoon in Hale Library's Hemisphere Room. One speaker spoke via webcast and the other live in person.

While Ornstein and Finkelstein's lectures had different focuses – Ornstein on China's place in U.S. politics and Finkelstein on China's military development – the two men presented a common theme: Chinese issues are becoming increasingly important to American life, and having a greater understanding of the nuances of Chinese culture will benefit American policy makers.

Finkelstein, a retired U.S. Army officer, is director of the China Studies Center and Project Asia at the CNA Corporation, a nonprofit research organization. He has also published several books on Asian affairs.

Finkelstein discussed the significant advancements that China's military – the People's Liberation Army – has made since 1993.

Watching other countries' military conflicts – including the U.S. in the first Gulf War – influenced China's leaders to seek out the technology necessary to engage in modern warfare, Finkelstein said.

China's advancements have been surprising to many and have also raised concerns among some people, but there is no evidence that the country intends to wage war globally, Finkelstein said.

Fort Riley to welcome home 3,500 soldiers by end of April

By Brandi Brumback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

About 3,500 soldiers are expected to return home to Fort Riley from Iraq by the end of April.

The soldiers, who spent the last 15 months in Iraq, started returning to the Fort Riley area on April 10. During their tour, they worked to keep the peace, patrolled and helped with humanitarian missions in the Rashid Security District of southern Baghdad, said Deb Skidmore, media relations officer for Fort Riley said.

About 300 soldiers were scheduled to return today and will be reunited with their families at a welcoming ceremony. About 200 more returned home Sunday, according to a Fort Riley press release.

Returning soldiers are from the 2nd Battalion, 16th Infantry Regiment; 1st Squadron, 4th Cavalry and the 610th Support Battalion, 2-32 Field Artillery and 1-28 Infantry, all elements of the 4th Infantry Brigade Combat Team.

According to the press release, the 4th Infantry Brigade Combat Team soldiers conducted operations resulting in the capture of more than 200 high-profile targets and reduced enemy cells from 20 to five.

Civil projects the soldiers completed included repairing sewer, water, medical and educational facilities and electrical projects. The 4th IBCT increased water accessibility by 90 percent by working with the Iraqi government.

Skidmore said the soldiers are expected to stay home for at least one year depending on the Army's needs.

"We try to stabilize them for a little while," Skidmore said.

Some of the returning soldiers have already been to Iraq two or three times, Skidmore said.

Fort Riley will not be sending any more soldiers to Iraq until the fall when 3,500 more will leave from the 2nd Brigade, 1st Infantry Division.

300 troops wait to greet their families and loved ones at a homecoming ceremony April 11. About 3,500 more soldiers are expected to return home by April.

HIT OR MISS | The editorial board selects Hit or Miss topics and writes them after a majority vote. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

HIT | OPEN HOUSE
About 20,000 visitors, including prospective students and their parents, visited the campus and different academic colleges. The event showcased activities and services offered all over campus, and the beautiful spring day never saw a dull moment.

MISS | 2008 SPRING GAME
The game definitely left a lot to be desired. Hardly any notable players were on the field for very long and the offense only ran basic plays. However, it's good to see coach Ron Prince take a more business-like approach after K-State's late-season skid last year.

HIT | CHINA-RELATED PROGRAMMING
The presentation "China Town Hall: Local Connections, National Reflections" took place Friday as part of China-related programming at 40 different U.S. locations. K-State was fortunate enough to have a Chinese military expert like David Finkelstein speak during its programming.

MISS | LETHAL FORCE
Soldiers and police in Nepal have been cleared to open fire to stop protests during China's Olympic torch run to the summit of Mount Everest. Climbers will be banned from Mount Everest's higher elevations during the torch's run.

HIT | MÖTLEY CRÜE
Mötley Crüe is releasing a new album and going on tour. Crüe Fest '08 will feature a 40-plus-city North American tour from July 1-Aug. 31.

MISS | RECESSION

Western powers should not boycott

AUBREE CASPER

Though a boycott of the 2008 Summer Olympics seems to be uniting Democrats and Republicans, it is only tearing international unity to shreds.

Conservative leaders like presidential hopeful John McCain and Democrats Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama have announced in a recent story that they will jump on the Olympic-Boycotting wagon. An international plan calls for the world's most powerful nations, including the U.S., Great Britain and all nations in the European Union, to boycott the Olympics or at least the opening ceremonies taking place in Beijing this summer.

According to CNN.com, President Bush is shaky about the looming start to the 2008 Summer Olympics that seems to be generating more international hate – the event that previously brought the world together if even for just a few weeks every four years. The story stated that the possibility of a massive boycott exists because of China's Communistic and poor human-rights record and also the recent treatment of Tibetan monks who spoke out against the genocide in Darfur.

Some officials reason that skipping only the opening ceremony would send an intended message to China, because the ceremony is dedicated to celebrating the host country and all other events are meant to support the athletes. However, few Americans realize that this isn't the first time American representatives have abandoned supporting U.S. athletes to make a political statement.

Refusal to attend Olympic events has been a practice in effect for more than 50 years; ironically, China led the first withdrawal of participation during the 1956 games. In 1980, the U.S. led 40 other nations in its first boycott of the Olympic Games in Moscow to protest the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, as stated by teacher Jennifer Rocke in her Olympic timeline on Youth.com.

28 years later, history has begun to repeat itself. Protests surrounding the carrying of the torch are wreaking havoc across Asia and Europe. Boycotting the 2008 games sounds like a spiteful way to take care of a political issue and defeats the entire purpose of the Olympic Games.

Let's put this into perspective. University "A" is under investigation by the NCAA for something the folks in the Big 12 see as a bit corrupt. As it happens, a few weeks after allegations against said university are made, the K-State football team is scheduled to play this university. In a stand against our seedy opponents, the deans, university president, faculty, alumni and the student body organize a boycott of the upcoming football game to show that they are against what University "A" has done. Who does that hurt? Only the coaches, staff and athletes of our football program are the ones truly feeling opposition from their own school. The wrong message would be sent in this case and the same end result would equate if an Olympic boycott was carried out.

Besides, if boycotting the Olympics is the key to solving international problems, why don't they just happen every year? Our next president – whoever wins – has already begun to support use of the Olympics as a platform for scolding nations and molding new foreign policy. Maybe we can end the War in Iraq by the Winter Olympics so we can sit next to our new friends from Iran and Afghanistan and finally cheer on our athletes instead of broadcasting what Bush is doing instead of attending the Olympics.

Additionally, such a boycott is bullying – something America is already trying to prove we don't do. Attacking a nation at its most vulnerable point – with all of its resources strained while hosting such a large-scale event – is ridiculous. The saying that "there is a time and place for everything" should be applied to supporters of the boycott.

Where gaps between distrust and old, hard feelings exist, opportunities to temporarily bridge those gaps – like the Olympics – allow for representatives in the form of the best athletes to come together and shed a positive light on their respective nations. Boycotting the 2008 Olympics will overshadow this light and it only sends the wrong message to our athletes and the entire international community.

Candidates, media should focus on issues

STEVEN KELLY

This election season has certainly been an interesting one. We've seen them misspeak on several occasions, make cameo appearances on "Saturday Night Live" – we've even seen one of them take a shot of whiskey in a Pennsylvania pub. Whiskey. Yet while these incidents are great for enlivening a dull dinner conversation, I fear they are drowning out what's really important: the issues.

Take Social Security, for example. It's no secret this welfare service has serious problems. According to the Social Security Administration's Web site, www.ssa.gov, "Social Security is not sustainable at it's currently scheduled level." The SSA also reported that the nation's first "baby boomer" started receiving Social Security retirement benefits in February.

Soon, millions of baby boomers will retire and withdraw their benefits, which will put additional strain on the system. There just won't be enough workers paying into the system to keep pace with the rising number of retirees. Of course, this is beside the fact that food and fuel prices continue to rise, making the already meager benefit check worth even less. At this rate, future retirees might not be able to buy a week's worth of groceries with their checks.

But this isn't usually what the public hears the candidates talking about at campaign rallies. No, something like Social Security reform won't stir voters' hearts like talking about the War in Iraq or the slumping economy. Plus, there isn't much time for the candidates to hash out policy between clarifying or apologizing for the previous day's comments and refuting the other candidates' accusations. As a result, the average American's knowledge of where each candidate stands on the issues is questionable at best.

In their defense, the candidates aren't ignorant of Social Security's problems. On the contrary, they are undoubtedly quite aware of the need for reform.

Still, it's interesting that of the three presidential contenders left, only one – Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill. – clearly gives his stance on Social Security on his official Web site.

Early last week, if people randomly turned on CNN or MSNBC News, they probably would have been bombarded with reactions or venomous commentaries on Obama's supposedly elitist remarks. So instead of informing their viewers about the issues and making them more competent voters, the news stations report controversial stories that will snag more viewers.

Ultimately, there's not much that can be done to change how candidates and the media present the issues during election season. The candidates will continue to say and do outrageous things for votes – and the media will be there to feed off of those stories – until the majority of Americans decide they've had enough of all the smoke and mirrors. Until then, it will be up to voters to discover for themselves where the candidates stand on the issues.

In the meantime, let's just hope someone finds a solution to that Social Security dilemma, because I really don't want to be eating Ramen noodles in retirement, too.

Vet Med offers pet clinic, volunteers during Open House

Matt Castro | COLLEGIAN
The Pet Show, held in Trotter Hall, was one of the many events offered this weekend during K-State's All-University's Open House. The College of Veterinary Medicine's Open House activities also included a children's pet clinic.

Cocker spaniel and greyhound brains, blackened lungs of a smoker, hearts, skeletons, a two-headed calf and a pet show were just a few of the various activities that took place at Trotter and Mosier halls Saturday for K-State's annual Open House festivities.

Manhattan residents, K-State students and children were entertained, grossed out and enlightened during the College of Veterinary Medicine's Open House activities.

Children also brought stuffed dogs, cats and a rabbit to get checked and treated at the pet clinic as part of the college's scheduled activities.

Alejandra Desormaux, first-year vet-med student, said the pet clinic was fun for kids and important practice for veterinary students wanting to gain experience with performing pet check-ups.

"Children bring their own stuffed animal, we check them in, get information about their stuffed animal," Desormaux said. "I take them into the exam room, ask questions, do heart checks and make prescriptions."

In addition to seeking treatment for their stuffed animals at the pet clinic, children got the opportunity to learn about anesthesia and surgery for animals.

Children also dressed up like surgeons with scrubs, surgeon's mask and gloves. Kyle Anderson, second-year vet-med student, said a mock surgical suite is at the veterinary school every year because children enjoy it.

Volunteers Brett Peterson and Corey Hutton from the Safe Harbor Prison Dog Program talked to audience members in Mosier Hall's Frick Auditorium about their program that adopts unwanted dogs, treats them and takes them to prison to be trained by inmates.

"We're the largest prison-based dog adoption of its kind in the nation," Peterson said.

Safe Harbor started four years ago, and the volunteers usually travel in groups of two to dog shelters and adopt dogs no one else wants. Many of the dogs test positive for heartworm disease, and have dental problems and various other complications, like arthritis.

After treatment, the dogs are taken to a correctional facility in Lansing, Kan., where they are trained and fostered by inmates with dog training experience.

Engineering group has trebuchet competition despite poor weather

Members of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers launch a cantaloupe from their trebuchet Friday afternoon. The ASME team won the Trebuchet Competition on the last throw of the afternoon.

High winds and technical difficulties didn't stop K-State's American Society of Mechanical Engineers from having its trebuchet competition Friday afternoon.

The event, which had two teams competing, was open to the Manhattan community, students and faculty to watch the teams launch their individual objects, despite the cold weather.

ASME's project manager Bil McPhail said this is the first time in a couple of years that K-State was host to this competition and it was opened to the entire campus.

"The goal is to let people know what a trebuchet is and to show people what they can do," McPhail, senior in mechanical engineering, said. "It's always nice to show old technology being applied today."

Trebuchets were used in the Middle Ages as a weapon, and they are similar to a catapult in that gravity pulls on one end while there is a lightweight projectile on the other end, McPhail said.

Members from Triangle fraternity, who happened to have built a trebuchet prior to being informed about the competition, also competed.

"One day we sat down and decided to build a trebuchet, and then we hear about the event," said Michael Reichenberger, freshman in mechanical engineering.

Reichenberger said he and several men tossed around ideas of a project they could all work on, and they came to the consensus that it would be cool

Running back Keithen Valentine rushes the ball during Saturday's Spring Game. Valentine rushed for 104 yards for the purple team, but the white team emerged victorious 3-0.

Valentine shines despite low score

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State put its running game on display Saturday during the Spring Game, and it was junior running back Keithen Valentine who benefited the most from the gameplan.

Valentine, a walk-on from Mississippi Delta Community College, ran for 104 yards on 15 carries for the Purple team, but the White team won 3-0 on a fourth-quarter 51-yard field goal from sophomore kicker Josh Cherry. K-State head coach Ron Prince said Valentine wants to be a part of the competition for running back.

"I think it is very clear that he is going to help us at that position," Prince said. "How much, how often and where is what we will try to figure out. I think he did a really terrific job. He has the kind of personality – and is the type of guy – you want in your locker room."

Valentine chose to come to K-State as a walk-on after learning the Wildcats did not have any more scholarships to give. Valentine said the underdog position is familiar to him.

"I have always been at the bottom – pretty much the underdog," he said. "I went to an underprivileged school, an underprivileged community college and I always had to prove myself."

While the running game thrived for both the White and Purple teams, the passing game had its flaws. Junior quarterback Josh Freeman was one-for-four for nine yards and an interception as he played in only the first two possessions.

Freshman Tysyn Hartman was two-of-seven for 20 yards, sophomore Carson Coffman was six-for-14 for 41 yards, and freshman Trey Scott was 1-of-3 for three yards for the Purple team.

"The plan was that Josh wouldn't get more than a quarter; I really wanted to see Tysyn and Carson," Prince said. "I'm pretty well established on what Josh can do in games, and I also wanted to make sure we got Scott in the game."

The Purple team opened the first quarter with a drive all the way to the White three-yard line before junior tight end Jeron Mastrud dropped the ball trying to stretch for the goal line.

Senior Gary Chandler intercepted Freeman's second pass of the game. It was exactly what Chandler said he would do.

"I had told Josh I was going to get him this year, and it ended up happening," Chandler said.

With 18 seconds left in the first half, Cherry set up for a 51-yard field goal to give the White team the lead. Cherry pushed the ball wide right and the game remained scoreless going into halftime.

"I could tell by the way it went off my foot, I didn't even have to look up, I could tell it was going to go right," Cherry said. "It was a bad feeling because you want to make them all. I was hoping for another chance to get it, and luckily I did."

Place-kicker Josh Cherry attempts a 51-yard field goal during the first half. Cherry scored the only points of the game, as the white team won 3-0.

With 12:46 left in the game, Cherry set up for his second field goal attempt of the day, and this time knocked the 51-yard attempt through to give the White team the 3-0 lead and eventually the win.

The defense seemed to post the strongest performance of the game. It held the White offense to 76 yards of total offense and the Purple being held to 128 yards.

"It was obviously a defensive game," Prince said. "Really in the last couple days in practice I think we have seen that kind of defensive performance, and I believe that gave us an indication of what was going to take place here today."

Wildcats escape last place

By Ryne Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State went into the weekend in last place in the Big 12 Conference and its opponent, Texas Tech, was right in front in the standings. The Wildcats (18-20, 5-10 Big 12) went out and won two of the three games to take them out of the cellar and into seventh place out of 10 teams.

FRIDAY: K-STATE 12, TEXAS TECH 4

K-State started off well and never seemed to stop offensively as the Wildcats defeated Texas Tech (18-23, 5-13 Big 12) 12-4 on Friday night.

The Wildcats started off the game with four runs in the first inning and added two in the fourth inning and six in the fifth.

Texas Tech's A.J. Ramos helped the Wildcats with his pitching. He walked the first four batters, giving K-State its first run. The next batter, freshman Carter Jurica, singled up the middle to drive in two runs.

Wildcats put distance between themselves and the Red Raiders in the sixth inning with six runs. K-State batted around the whole lineup starting with Jurica and ending with Jurica. Junior Nate Tenbrink hit a three-run homerun to put the visiting team up 12-4.

Senior Brad Hutt, the starting pitcher for the Wildcats, and only went 1 2/3 innings while giving up four runs in the bottom of the first. Freshman Thomas Rooke (4-1) came in and got the win for K-State by pitching the rest of the game, striking out five and only giving up three hits.

SATURDAY: K-STATE 7, TEXAS TECH 4

Two big hits late in the game gave K-State the 7-4 victory over Texas Tech in the second game of a three-game series.

Junior Jordan Cruz hit a three-run homerun in the top of the 10th inning to give the Wildcats the 7-4 lead, but that wouldn't have happened if it wasn't for junior Byron Wiley.

Wiley tied the game in the top of the ninth inning when he doubled to center field to score senior Brett Scott with two outs. It was Wiley's only hit of the game.

Texas Tech had a 3-1 lead after four innings, but K-State fought back scoring two runs in the fifth and the one in the ninth. The Red Raiders scored their last run of the game in the eighth.

Junior Nate Tenbrink homered for the second straight game. In the fifth, he hit a two-run homerun. The win went to senior pitcher Daniel Edwards (2-3) after he pitched the final 1 2/3 innings.

It was Texas Tech's eighth-straight loss.

Wildcats capture 2 titles at KU Relays

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Through cold and rainy conditions, the Wildcats earned one event victory on the track and one in the field at the prestigious Kansas Relays.

Junior Mike Myer took the title for the Wildcats in the 100-meter dash Saturday when he finished with a time of 10.43. He raced to a season-best time of 10.42 in the preliminaries on Thursday. Coach Cliff Rovelto said he was pleased with Myer's performance, but he was not surprised by his times in the race.

"It was good, but it was consistent with how he's been performing," Rovelto said.

Junior Loren Groves unleashed a throw of 201-06 to take the title in the women's hammer throw Thursday. The throw earned her a qualification for the NCAA Midwest Regional meet. Senior Laci Heller, who has won the hammer throw twice at the KU relays in previous years, placed sixth with a regional qualifying throw of 180-09.

Rovelto said Groves' performance in the hammer throw was impressive because she made the throw in cold and rainy weather.

Senior Lindsey Salsbury was the Wildcat leader in horsemanship, leading with a five-point win over Oklahoma State's Jordan Pickelman.

On the English side, K-State tied Delaware State on the first day of competition, 4-4. K-State won one point in equitation over fences event, with junior Whitney Snyder beating Delaware State's Ashley Butler for the point. In equitation on the flat, K-State captured three of the four points to force a tie, with freshman Julie Wolfert, junior Jenny Giraldin and Snyder all winning in head-to-head competition.

In the second day of English competition, K-State fell to Georgia 7-1. The only scorer for the Wildcats was Giraldin, who won in equitation on the flat by one point.

Men's a capella choir to celebrate 10 years with concert tonight

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cadence, the men's a cappella choir at K-State, is celebrating 10 years of existence at its spring concert at 7:30 p.m. today in McCain Auditorium.

A group of students formed Cadence in 1998 as a way to continue performances after high school, said Bryan Meyer, senior in animal sciences and industry. Meyer is a Cadence member and the group's music manager this year.

All 12 of the men in Cadence are also members of the larger group, Men's Glee Club. Cadence has been student-led since its beginning.

"We're just a bunch of guys that have a semi-musical background and enjoy singing," Meyer said.

There are no music majors in the group, which differs from other universities, Meyer said.

"It's an accomplishment for us to sound as good as other universities but not have the raw talent that they have," he said.

Grant Haley, junior in hotel and restaurant management, said the fact that Cadence is made up of all non-music majors is one of his favorite parts about the group. This is Haley's third year in Cadence; he is also the group's business manager.

"None of us know how to read music that well," Haley said.

So rather than promoting just the music department, he said "it's advertising for K-State as a whole."

Meyer said the group has performed about 40 or 50 shows this year for events around Manhattan including, moms' weekends, senior days and dinner functions.

Haley said the group advertises for their shows on campus by singing to people on their way to classes and visiting sororities during chapter nights.

Meyer said this year's spring show will consist of many different types of songs. The men have added six or seven new numbers this year, including "Hooked on a Feeling," "Roll to Me" and "Hooch." He said the group's version of "Wabash Cannonball" is always a hit.

"We try to mix it up every time so no person gets the same concert twice," Meyer said.

Kurt Krupp, senior in electronic media and print journalism, said he enjoys the light atmosphere of the group. But, he said, the men are always working hard to learn the songs.

This show will consist of more features and skits than past shows, Krupp said.

"It will be more fun because we're being able to celebrate 10 years of existence," Krupp said.

Open House not always a big part of K-State

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Saturday concluded this year's Open House – something many students and families look forward to each year. Though it might seem like a staple, having an all-college open house was an issue of debate in the 1950s and 1960s.

The first open house was in 1921 for the College of Agriculture and called Ag Fair. Later, it was called the Engineer's Open House, Hospitality Days and finally, Open House, which included all colleges, in 1969.

The following article is from the May 15, 1951, Collegian and displays students' opinions on having an all-college open house.

ALL-COLLEGE OPEN HOUSE FAVORED IN STUDENT POLL

How can you say for sure? This sums up what many students think about an all-college open house for K-State. While some say "yes" and others yell a blunt "no," the general opinion is that "we think it can be done, but we'll have to be shown."

Most of the students questions about an all-college open house showed that they had thought about the idea because they could see both advantages and disadvantages to the plan.

The questions these students answered are: "What do you think about having an all-college open house here at K-State? Do you think it would work?"

Glen Davis, AG 2, thinks that the plan has possibilities because then the ag school could work up something big like the engineering school now has.

He adds that he doesn't think it would cut attendance at any one display, but that it would have to last more than one day for people to get through all the exhibits.

Dorothy Van Horn, HE 2, says that "a display of all schools at the same time would be OK, but that there would have to be a maximum of co-operation between the schools to make it work. Either the departments would have to limit the number of displays or very few people would see them all." She points out that "no one appreciates or enjoys anything when they are too tired. All in all, it's a good idea, but it would need co-operation and limitations."

Evans Freese, AGE 4, thinks that "it would be excellent publicity throughout the state for Kansas State. It would be hard to see in one day, but if it lasted more than one day it would create a very serious housing situation in Manhattan. Attendance at the individual displays would be very probably be about the same."

Jacqueline Pantier, HE 2, feels that more people from all over the state could come if only one weekend during the year were set aside for Open House at K-State.

Allan Ingle, AGE 3, says, "No, I don't think it would work here. It takes too long to go through engineers' Open House alone. The families that come couldn't split so that they could just visit the displays that interested them because they could never find each other again in all the crowd. The plan sounds good in theory, but there are veterinarian medicine and an 88.8 percent graduate rate.

"We have 56 undergraduate students doing projects, and they are from all over the campus – from the sciences to the humanities," Cortez said.

Administrators including Provost Duane Nellis and Pat Bosco, dean of student life, stopped by to see students' presentations and congratulate them on their accomplishments. Families and friends also came to the event to support the students.

The students involved in this program typically represent minority groups like black, Asian American, Latino and American Indian students, but it also includes first-generation sciences students.

Many students get to explore their interests through the program.

Rita Perez, junior in public nutrition, said she is interested in the topic of obesity. She conducted research, did experiments on mice and presented her findings at the symposium.

"We found that the dietary restriction is probably more effective in losing weight than exercise," she said.

She said participation in DSP was a great experience.

"I had no idea before coming here that I would learn so much," Perez said. "This program helped me with my classes. I took genetics and it was really helpful, because I already knew some of the things they were teaching me."

Tiffany Harris, sophomore in life sciences, is studying links between incomes and financial risks by the example of population in Manhattan, Ogden, Wamego and Junction City. She said DSP helped her become a more responsible person and to know professors better, and enhanced her whole college experience.

The young scholars have not only have gained hands-on experience, but they are surrounded with a network of experts in their fields.

"I'm a transfer student," said Johna D. Wallace, senior in biology. "I came to the K-State as a junior and I thought it would be hard to integrate into K-State community, but Developing Scholars program really helped me."

Students from multiple racial and economic backgrounds receive academic, social and financial support while participating in the discovery and creation of new knowledge at K-State through DSP.

Edgar Martinez, senior in mechanical engineering, was presenting his finding about the image of minorities portrayed in advertising.

"Developing scholars program opens a lot of doors for us, give advice where to go, where to look, set you with people who will help and guide you," he said.

TRACK | Team to travel to different sites again

The Wildcats had two athletes competing in the women's heptathlon. Freshman Annika Schoenebeck and sophomore Stephanie Hejde started the seven-event competition on Wednesday.

Schoenebeck finished fourth, collecting 5,065 points. Hejde did not finish, skipping the 800-meter dash.

The women's 4x100-meter relay finished fourth at the meet. The team of seniors Donniece Parrish, Marnyka Honeycutt, Candice Mills, and freshman Tiara Walpool clocked a season-best time of 45.58.

The Wildcats got another top-five finish from Walpool in the triple jump. She finished fifth with a jump of 37-10.00, earning a regional qualifying mark.

Just one week earlier, Walpool recorded a jump of 41-09.25 at the UTEP Invitational.

Rovelto said the weather and large field of athletes at the KU relays were the reasons Walpool did not match her previous performance.

"In Tiara's case, she did nearly as well as she did at UTEP," he said. "I think part of that was the conditions were not the same."

Freshman Ali Pistora took fifth place in the javelin, with a throw of 141-09.

The Wildcats also sent athletes to the Mt. SAC Relays on the campus of Mt. San Antonio College, in Walnut, Calif. Sophomore Beverly Ramos finished seventh in the 3,000-meter steeple chase with a season-best time of 10:28.70.

Next weekend, the Wildcats will again split and compete at multiple events.

Starting Thursday, the Wildcats will compete in Des Moines, Iowa, at the Drake Relays, and on Saturday, athletes will compete at the Nebraska Meet in Lincoln, Neb.

to K-State early in the final game of Texas Tech series, as the Red Raiders beat the Wildcats 19-4 in seven innings.

Texas Tech opened the game with nine runs off of seven hits in the bottom of the first, two runs in the second and three runs in the third.

K-State scored zero runs in the first four innings.

K-State couldn't get on the scoreboard until the fifth inning when the Wildcats put one run across the plate. The Wildcats added three more in the sixth, but Red Raiders still didn't stop scoring.

Texas Tech had 14 runs going into the fifth, but added five more giving them a 19-1 lead at one point.

K-State's senior starter Chase Bayuk didn't even record an out.

Bayuk gave up six runs – one unearned – before getting pulled for freshman Justin Lindsey, who allowed three-unearned runs before he was pulled after getting only one out.

PARTY PLANNING

How to throw a cocktail party

Throwing a cocktail party randomly or for a special occasion might seem stressful but with a few easy tips it can be simple and fun to plan.

MONICA CASTRO

FINDING A LOCATION

Though finding a location is key to having a party, make sure you know how many people you want to invite. This will help you determine if the party should be at your house or a different location.

Kathouse Lounge owner Brian Berry said he has a variety of parties for people but said it is important to find out how many people will attend to determine how much space will be needed.

Berry said for people looking to have a party, there is a VIP room that seats 15-20 or the main floor, which can be broken up in different sections, depending on the number of guests.

Kathouse caters to whatever the client wants, but Berry said it can get more expensive depending on when the party takes place.

"We have three to five cocktail parties a week and in all different sizes and however they want," Berry said. "We change the decorations depending on the type of party like for formal dinners we bought drapes and candles."

He said the Kathouse will change decorations depending on the party's theme.

"People stress about the time and size of their party, and we try to ease that up for them so it is less stress in their hands," Berry said.

I'M THIRSTY

A cocktail party is about different and fun drinks for guests. Berry said a few popular drinks made during cocktail parties at Kathouse are cosmopolitans or martinis for girls. Men enjoy drinking beer, he said.

If the party takes place at your home, Mike Towne, owner of the Library Discount Liquor, said the rule of thumb is to figure out the number of people attending the party so you can know how many bottles to buy.

"Secondly, you want to know how long the event will last because, for a cocktail party, it will be two drinks per person per hour for the first two hours and, after that, one drink per person per hour," Towne said.

He said women tend to drink more vodka and rum drinks, while men tend to drink bourbon and whiskey. For one liter bottle of liquor, a person can get 22 pours or drinks, he said.

Other drinks people might enjoy are wine and beer. With a bottle of wine, one can expect to get five good-sized glasses, he said.

Gin is a true cocktail party drink, though is not as popular as it has been in the past. For most cocktail parties, a bottle of gin is plenty, Towne said. Tequila has replaced gin's popularity, Towne also said, and a bottle of tequila will suffice unless planning to make margaritas.

With the popular vodka, rum and bourbon in mind, coming up with signature drinks is also something you can do.

A few drinks Towne suggested are the Manhattan, a classic martini, and a Cuba Libre. Party planners can go online to find out the recipes for those drinks.

The Food Network Web site, www.foodnetwork.com, also has a few cocktail drink recipes to try out.

If you are not sure what liquors to buy and drinks to make, most liquor stores can provide assistance, but make sure you know the number of guests you will have. Also, keep in mind other alternative drinks like punch or pop for those guests who do not like alcohol or are designated drivers.

WHAT IS THERE TO EAT?

What is a party without some food? Food and snacks for your party could be catered, potluck or you can make everything yourself.

Make an effort to know your guests tastes so you can provide their favorite snacks or buy traditional snacks like chips, salsa, dips, nuts, crackers, cheeses, fruits and vegetable trays.

For more nontraditional snacks, mini sandwiches, mini pizzas and taquitos are good.

If you feel overloaded, having a pot luck could be a good option. Having each guests bring a dish simplifies planning, and it can be fun for guests to try out different food.

Some hosts might instead want to have a full meal instead of just snacks. If that is the case, hosts could have a favorite restaurant do the catering. Just remember to keep your budget in mind, as it is easy to overspend, especially with food.

MUSIC

During a cocktail party, jazz music is ideal. It sets the mood and makes the party have a classy, old style feel. If you or your guests are not the jazz type, any music will work.

If you have rented out a location for your cocktail party, the owners might have contacts of bands or DJs for hire.

ATTIRE

If you are going to host a cocktail party, you should go all out and make your guests dress up, with suits or a collared shirts and nice pants for guys and short, "cocktail" dresses for the ladies.

DECORATIONS

Scott Waters, owner of Waters Party and Wedding, said there are many ways to decorate a cocktail party. Essentially, it is all up to the host.

Waters said to first come up with a color scheme you like, and then use the colors to base table cloths and centerpieces. Hosts can hang streamers or even put fabric on the ceiling.

Usually, he said, a cocktail party will use gold for their color theme.

"Traditionally people go with flowers or candles, and you can be more creative, of course," Waters said. "Or you can be simple as putting a picture in the center of the table."

SEX AND THE CITY: THE LITTLE APPLE

Sex is nothing to get worked up about

ERIC DAVIS

If there's one topic I don't understand, it's sex.

It's not that I don't understand where babies come from or what makes a man different from a woman; I just don't understand why people go crazy about sex.

I feel like this is a good time to mention two key facts. One, I have a very idealistic view of sexual intercourse, and two, I am a virgin.

Sister Mary Patrick from "Sister Act 2" said it best when she told her sex-education class, "You don't have to bite the doughnut to know it's sweet."

I grew up in the church and had it pounded into my head that sex before marriage will wreck my life and result in unplanned pregnancies. However, years of thinking for myself and using the brain God gave me have taught me that this is an unrealistic view.

My church pounded it into my head before I graduated. Its leaders warned me that college would be a minefield of "worldly" temptation and I would have to really work hard to not succumb to my boundless sexual desires. That also turned out to be false.

I can remember the first time I tried to have sex with a woman who I didn't know. From the minute we went back to my residence-hall room, I just felt weird. I will spare everyone the embarrassment and just say it didn't happen. Also, I can't remember a time in my life that I have been more embarrassed.

That was the last time I tried to have a one-night stand.

After that, I thought the way into a woman's pants was getting a girlfriend. Again, I will spare you all embarrassing stories and just say that it hasn't happened.

After those first two years of striking out, I just decided that I shouldn't force it and the right moment would come. It hasn't, but I'm not too worried. In addition to the embarrassing stories that I could tell about my own life, I have the stories of my friends who have been adversely affected by sex.

I have one friend who turned to Internet hook-up sites to meet sexual partners. After that first time, he tried to hold the fact that he was no longer a virgin over my head. I always wanted to ask why he was in such a hurry to prove he could have sex. (This is where my idealistic views come into play.)

Two of my other friends keep going back to relationships they know aren't healthy, but the sex comforts them. I feel like they have their self-worth wrapped up in their libido and if they sleep alone, they are unwanted.

I'm not trying to paint a picture of desperation here; I'm just not willing to throw away 22 years of celibacy for anyone's reasons but my own. I'm sure it will happen one day – I just want it to be on my terms.

TREBUCHET | 2 KSU groups compete

to have a trebuchet.

"The weekend after we built it back in February, we took it out that first weekend and launched things like softballs and tennis balls," he said.

Reichenberger, a member of Triangle fraternity, said the competition is beneficial for people to come out and watch while having a good time.

"It's always a good time to see a cantaloupe getting smashed," he said. "It's something cool to see because almost everyone I've talked to doesn't know what a trebuchet is."

Caitlin Agnew, freshman in open option, was an example of someone who had no prior knowledge of trebuchets and decided to come see how they work.

"I thought it was a catapult before, but now I see what the difference is," she said.

Though the weather was cold, Agnew said it was a great opportunity for her.

"I just wanted to come check it out," she said. "I've been starring at that [trebuchet] wood for weeks, so I wanted to come see it throw."

Though an engineering organization sponsored the event, Agnew encouraged people to get involved and learn more about the program even though they might not be an engineering major.

"Give it a try," she said. "I never thought I was into this stuff, but learning more about it, I find some of it interesting."

too many problems to make it work out."

Doris Keas, HE 2, says "something along this line could be worked out. It would have to take more than one day.

It would save the individual schools a lot of bother if the school shad open house at the same time and divided the responsibilities."

Harlan Copeland, AG 2, thinks that the plan probably could be carried out here, but that "it is more impressive the way it is. Each might detract from the other, and as a result each school might try to out-do the others by having more exhibits and thus sacrifice quality."

Though the opinions of the students are not unified, there is a lot of interest in learning more about an all-college open house.

They are most interested in how the plan would be put into effect, the benefits they would get from it, the disadvantages of the plan and the success other schools have had with all-college open houses.

Students continue to wait on iSIS

By Brandon McAtee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students might want to think twice before adding themselves to a class wait list, when enrolling in classes on iSIS.

The new enrollment system does not allow professors to supersede the student waiting list.

The inability of professors to move students up on the list will not allow students to change their position on the waiting list, which will be updated frequently and automatically according to the number of students who drop the class.

Dolores Takemoto, professor in biochemistry, said she first found out about this aspect of the new system in an introductory class, a class for all professors to learn about iSIS.

"I think it is kind of a good thing. It takes the load off of me for having people asking me to move around the wait list, and I think it should be first come, first served. I think it is more fair," Takemoto said.

Jennifer Gehrt, administration and finance vice president, said deans are able to supersede students if there is an unusual circumstance.

Gehrt also said she believes it is a fair system that can help students.

"In the past I understand some classes had wait lists but the professor never bothered to add students from the wait list when another student dropped the class. This way if someone drops a class, a student is added automatically," Gehrt said.

She also said the system is updated about every 15 minutes and students are able to see how long the wait list is when enrolling.

"Overall the system has been viewed as good, at least from what I am hearing," Gehrt said. "Although, I am sure there are other opinions."

ROAD CLOSING

4th Street to be closed up to a month

— GOOGLE.COM

The two Fourth Street blocks from Leavenworth to Humboldt streets will be closed for three to four weeks.

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fourth Street will close today for improvements from Humboldt to Leavenworth streets for three to four weeks.

Improvements include the installation of storm sewers, curb inlets and new pavement.

The improvements will allow for the installation of a new traffic signal at the intersection of Fourth and Leavenworth streets, according to a City of Manhattan press release.

Leavenworth will allow traffic to flow east and west, but motorists who need to travel north or south on Fourth will need to follow detour signs. The detour bypasses drivers to Juliette Avenue.

Buck Driggs, office manager at HWS Consulting Group, said there was not a better time for the construction, as the area does not necessarily have a low-traffic time of year.

He said Fourth Street probably will not be closed again until the construction of a roundabout in 2010. Otherwise, residents can expect parts of Third Street to be closed as result of the overall downtown redevelopment project makes progress.

When Fourth Street opens again, it will be a three-lane urban highway section, according to the press release.

Traditional, black greeks meet to mend split

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In efforts to unite the K-State greek community, the members of the Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council and National Panhellenic met Monday to improve communication between historically black greeks and traditional greeks on campus.

The presidents of the three organizations have met numerous times this year in anticipation for this meeting, in which all of the organizations' executive boards met Monday night at the Aggieville Pizza Hut.

"The first step is interacting with one another," said Rayonna Thomas, NPHC president. "Some are intimidated by us because they don't understand."

In the past, there have been many issues that have hindered communication and caused a lack of connection among the bodies – including lack of cultural and historical understanding, Thomas said.

BREAKING DOWN MISCONCEPTIONS

After members of the K-State greek community attended a national conference that discussed issues among historically black greeks and traditional greeks, they were motivated to start working more closely with the NPHC, said Jonathan Hermes, IFC public relations officer.

"We are both striving to do the same things," Hermes said. "We want to find leaders to deal with the misconceptions and stereotypes that some members might have."

Macy Wendler, president of PHC, said many misconceptions can begin by word of mouth and this meeting served as a way for the leaders of the organizations to get information straight from the source to better teach their individual organizations.

Many members of the three organizations admitted to being apprehensive at first, but as the meeting carried on, they began to learn and appreciate their similarities.

Member of the historically black fraternity Alpha Phi Alpha and NPHC recording secretary Ray Fambro said he enjoyed discussing some of the issues on his mind.

"Typically, there is a barrier," Fambro said. "The meeting tonight was a good tool and really showed me that we should work together more."

At the meeting, the lack of knowledge among the organizations on all sides was apparent, as many members had to ask questions about other organizations.

Fambro said he was surprised about the amount of history the other organizations knew about their respective fraternities and sororities. During the meeting, each member stated the organization they are affiliated with, as well as general history.

"At first, I thought that they didn't seem to value their history or were not as familiar as their history," he said. "But after hearing some of them talk more, I found that we do have a lot more in common than I thought."

Wendler said it was unfortunate that many of the members did not know as much history as the NPHC members did, and she said she thought it was inspiring to hear their history.

"I found this is something we are lacking in and could do much better," Wendler said. "I think knowing our history better will help with retention and building pride in our members."

SEPARATE GOVERNING BOARDS

At K-State, the National Panhellenic Council, the umbrella organization for the nine greek organizations that make up the Divine Nine sororities and fraternities, has experienced an increase in membership. She said there are now almost 50 members in the NPHC council, one of the largest NPHC memberships at K-State.

Walter Kimbrough, author of Black Greek 101, member of Alpha Phi Alpha and president of historically black Philander Smith College, said Black Greek Letter Organizations, BGLOs, which have served as a safe haven for blacks on white campuses in the past, are still relevant and

Chinese awareness increases due to language classes, student influx

By Holly Campbell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The United States and China are on opposite sides of the planet, but the two nations are coming together more frequently on K-State's campus in large part to the growing Chinese language program and new efforts to recruit Chinese students to campus.

Publications all over the country have declared Chinese is a critical language for Americans to learn, said Wei Wu, director of the Chinese language program at K-State. China makes up nearly a quarter of the world's population, and that has huge implications, she said.

"I really wanted to take a language that would be not only interesting but also a challenge," said Emily Haug, junior in political science and marketing with a minor in Chinese. "I narrowed my choices down to Arabic and Chinese but ultimately decided that Chinese was the better fit for me and my career goals."

At the same time, more students than ever before have been traveling to China to study the culture and language. There are five students participating in yearlong programs in China this year, 10 students going this summer to teach conversational English, and one student studying Chinese in Shanghai this summer.

INCREASING CROSS-CULTURAL OPPORTUNITIES

K-State only has offered Chinese courses since 2005, when the university received a grant to start a Chinese language program, Wu said. Before K-State started its program, students who wanted to learn Chinese in the state of Kansas had to go to the University of Kansas, she said.

Wu said about 60 students are enrolled in Chinese language classes this semester.

However, students who enjoy learning Chinese still have to transfer to KU if they want to major in the language, Wu said. The six semesters that make up the Chinese minor are all students can take at K-State.

While Haug said she would not have time for a Chinese major, she said she does wish K-State offered more Chinese classes.

"After next year, I will have completed all the Chinese classes that K-State offers," she said. "I'm a little nervous that I will forget what I have learned so far because I will not be practicing the language daily."

Nathaniel LaRue | COLLEGIAN

Wei Wu, director of the Chinese language program at K-State, teaches her Chinese 102 class how to ask questions in Chinese.

One way Haug is getting an opportunity to practice her Chinese is by going to Wuhan, China, this summer to teach conversational English classes.

"I'm not really sure what to expect, but I'm looking forward to working with and getting to know college students from another culture," she said.

Increasing numbers of K-State students have been making trips like this to China, Wu said.

"When they come back, they all say they wanted to stay," she said.

While more K-State students

GOLDEN DAIQUIRI

6 fresh raspberries
1 packed tablespoon dark brown sugar
Ice cubes
2 ounces golden rum
Juice of 1/2 lime (about 1 tablespoon)

Muddle raspberries with sugar in a rocks glass. Fill a cocktail shaker with ice. Add the rum and lime juice, shake until chilled. (In general, the drink is ready by the time the shaker mists up.) Pour drink with some ice over the berries in the glass.

GIN AND TONIC JELLIES

1 teaspoon gelatin
5 ounces tonic water
1 1/2 ounces gin
2 teaspoons lime juice
Small wedges lime, key lime or other small citrus

Pour about half the tonic into a bowl. Scatter the gelatin over the surface, do not stir, set aside until the gelatin blooms (softens). Meanwhile, warm the rest of the tonic over very low heat until just simmering. Whisk hot tonic, then gin into the gelatin. Pour jelly into four shot glasses and garnish with lime wedges or citrus of choice. Place in the refrigerator for two hours (or overnight) until set.

10-year-old Cadence performs show filled with music, skits

Matt Castro | COLLEGIAN

John Yingling, sophomore in life sciences, sings a solo during the Cadence performance in McCain Auditorium on Monday evening. Cadence showcased music both old and new and incorporated several skits into its show. The show ended with an encore and a wedding proposal.

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brian Meyer, senior in animal science and industry and member of Cadence, the a cappella men's choir on campus, surprised both the crowd and his girlfriend at Cadence's 10th year anniversary spring show last night.

He called his girlfriend, Michelle Hubin, senior in animal science and industry, onto the stage for the group's encore performance. A few female audience members gasped and waited in anticipation for a proposal.

Meyer sang "The Luckiest" to a smiling Hubin, and the men singing in the background scooted inward as the song ended. Meyer pulled out a ring and finished his number with, "Michelle, will you marry me?"

Ross Schaffer, group member and sophomore in secondary education, said the proposal was one of his favorite parts of the show. He said the group knew about the surprise about a month in advance and started preparing the song.

Schaffer said Cadence was one of the main reasons he came to K-State. He had seen the group perform during his senior orientation, and he said he wanted to be one of them.

"Going to practice is the highlight of my day," he said.

Betsy Dunlap, sophomore in chemical engineering, said Cadence came to her sorority to advertise for the spring show and give the girls "a sneak peek." Dunlap said she had heard them in concert before and wanted to hear the group a second time.

"It was awesome. That's why I'm here," she said. "It's exciting to hear people who have good voices."

The group performed a mix of oldies, including "Brown-Eyed Girl," the Beatles' "Blackbird" and "Come and Go with Me," and other genres of music. They performed more modern songs like Green Day's "Basketcase" and "Faith" in the second half of the show.

The opening number was "Hooked on a Feeling." The audience could hear caveman-like noises, "ooga-cha-ka, ooga-cha-ka," coming from behind the stage. The curtain rose to reveal Jeremy Hoffman, sophomore in construction science and management, dressed in a make-shift diaper. And nothing else.

Some Cadence members sang a playful ditty about "Cereal and Milk." Another song, called "Hooch," required the use of a bar on stage. The men crowded around it and acted like they were relaxing at a club while singing.

Cadence packed its show with skits during and in between numbers. Meyer and Grant Haley, junior in hotel and restaurant management, dressed up as old men and shuffled across the stage bantering about the oldies songs the group was singing.

Norman and Mary Alice Schlesener, Manhattan residents and K-State alumni, said they enjoyed the show's humor.

"That was something else," Norman Schlesener said. Referring to the beat-boxing, he said, "I like to hear them making their own rhythms."

Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 created the diversity coordinator position to improve state test scores in subgroups and increase the diversity in its staff.

The school district now adheres to eight diversity initiatives as a means to diversify the district.

"[It is my job] to raise awareness, talking to different people in the community and talking to students themselves in the community so they know there is someone here to listen to their concerns who is willing to listen," said Tiffany Powell, diversity coordinator for the school district.

According to the district's Web site, usd383.org, the district works to secure top-level commitment, complete an assessment of diversity issues and implement training and other diversity initiatives during the 2007-08 school year. The initiatives themselves are based on diversity programs that have been tested in the public and private sector.

"The position was created because of a need to diversify the faculty here in this school district," Powell said. "There was a group of individuals who created this position.

"A diversity commission worked hard to talk to the school board and make them take the position seriously. They worked four years to create this position."

There are 6,800 students in USD 383. The district consists of three secondary schools and nine elementary schools, all of which Powell interacts with to improve student performance.

"There were two areas we felt [a diversity coordinator] could help," said USD 283 Superintendent Bob Shannon. "First, it will help students in all subgroups better perform on state tests. We felt a diversity coordinator could help us do that."

He also said the position was created to help diversify the staff.

Shannon said the Board of Education created quantifiable objectives for the district to complete within three years. A public report will be issued in June measuring the success of the efforts made to diversify the district this year.

As diversity coordinator, Powell said she has an open line of communication with both administrators and families living in the Manhattan and Ogden areas. On occasion, Powell talks one-on-one with students, which she said is her favorite task.

"All the things I do, I do for students," she said. "Sometimes to do what you want, you have to go through the administration, but even then, it's for the students."

Overuse of antibiotics killing potentially life-saving bacteria

JOE VOSSEN

Eight decades have passed since the discovery of penicillin and the development of its use as an antibiotic medicine.

Since then, doctors and scientists have used antibiotics to save millions of lives from diseases caused by bacterial infections like meningitis, pneumonia, syphilis and gonorrhea. The significant role antibiotics play in improving our health is undeniable.

According to the Journal of Pediatrics, oral antibiotics are the most frequently prescribed pediatric outpatient drugs.

The incredible healing power of antibiotics has led to their overuse. When doctors over-prescribe antibiotics or when patients do not finish their recommended dosage schedule, the surviving bacteria grow stronger and multiply in a dangerous form of natural selection. Researchers are forced to develop new, stronger strains of antibiotics to stay one step ahead of resistant strains.

According to a 2006 study by the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Disease, more than 70 percent of the bacteria that cause hospital-acquired infections are resistant to at least one of the antibiotics most commonly used to treat them.

We live in a germophobic world. The search for stronger antibiotics and the evolution of super-bacteria have been well-documented by the media. Companies have responded to our fears by marketing products that promise to protect us from microorganisms.

"Seven years ago, only a few dozen products containing antibacterial agents were being marketed for the home, and now more than 700 are available," wrote Stuart Levy, Tufts University School of Medicine professor, in a

Ryan Nickell | COLLEGIAN

2000 paper for the Centers for Disease Control. "The public is being bombarded with ads for cleansers, soaps, toothbrushes, dishwashing detergents and hand lotions, all containing antibacterial agents."

The problem is that antibacterial products were developed to prevent the transmission of disease-causing bugs in sick patients – not healthy people.

The products that make us feel safer have few, if any, proven health benefits to people who are not suffering bacterial infections. They do, however, select for even more resistant strains of bacteria and weaken our immune systems by overprotecting us from cells that help our immune systems grow and mature. A certain amount of bacteria is good for us.

Probiotics – live microorganisms like bacteria and yeasts touted for their beneficial health effects – increasingly are sold as dietary supplements. Even more exciting are the developments in biotherapeutics, which are genetically modified bacteria reprogrammed to help us instead of infect us.

The idea has led to remarkable advancements in medicine. An article by Jessica Sachs in the April 2007 edition of Popular Science outlined the most promising discoveries. Researchers in Amsterdam have modified a cheese-making bacterium, Lactococcus lactis-Thy12, to relieve Crohn's disease, a disorder caused by the immune system mistakenly attacking the intestines' normal complement of digestive microbes.

Doctors at the Mary Crowley Medical Research Center in Dallas injected a genetically modified breed of salmonella into cancer patients to shrink inoperable tumors. A biotech company called Oragenics has patented a cavity-preventing strain of the natural bacteria that exists in our mouths, Streptococcus mutans.

These breakthroughs are exciting, but researchers are encountering resistance from the Food and Drug Administration, the arm of the federal government that gives such studies the green light.

A mountain of red tape and plenty of federal review boards – often skeptical of "Frankenbugs" – await any scientist looking for approval of larger, more meaningful trials. It took Jeffrey Hillman, the founder of Oragenics and lead researcher behind the cavity-fighting bacteria, more than 10 years to secure approval for a study of his bacteria – a study that included only two people.

Engineered bacteria will be a revolution to our health care system. The risks involved merit caution and careful review by organizations like the FDA, but fear of the new and unknown is delaying valuable research that could one day save lives.

A fear of bacteria stands between the medicine of the 20th century and the medical advancements of the 21st. Someday we will embrace and depend on bacteria, the very organisms we worked so hard to eradicate from our environment.

Vulgar displays of supposed artwork not art

ADAM PHAM

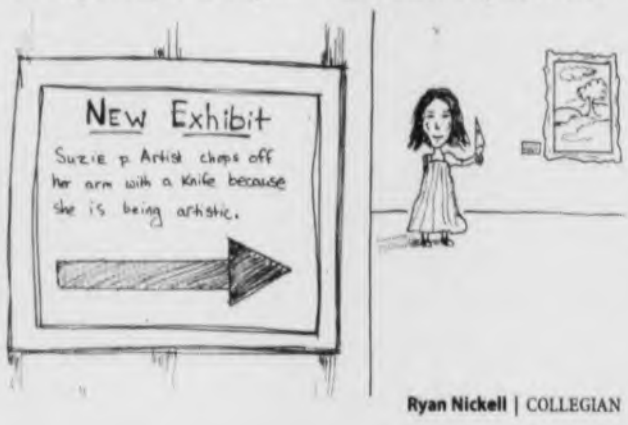
Arguments concerning art tend to proceed in the following way: Two people first discover their disagreement on a given piece; they engage in dialectic of a progressively larger scope; they ultimately find their differences to be of some nonfoundational nature; they agree to disagree.

This is not always the sequence, and relativism is not always the necessary result, but it seems to be the standard.

Since the inception of postmodernism, however, the architecture of artistic expression itself has been challenged; the notes decided arbitrarily, the colors painted indistinct, the words shrouded in ambiguity. Must there be colors, sounds, rhythm? Must there be a canvas? Must there be an artist? Does "proper" art even exist?

Moving from generalized abstractions to concrete examples is straightforward: Is the serialism of Schoënberg too radical, or do we draw the line at his student John Cage's out-and-out aleatoric music? Or must we, as Ludwig Wittgenstein asserted, journey all the way back to Brahms to find anything of value? Is Picasso the final frontier, or do we permit everything up to and including Jackson Pollock? Does James' "Ulysses" represent the awakening of modernism or rather the metastasis of a terminal disease?

It's an easy escape to do as the relativists do, after all – eschew these questions together and endorse an artistic mandate of laissez-faire. This capitulation, exasperating as it can be, does serve as a constructive prelude to the crucial thesis; while it is and always has been difficult to properly define what art is and when it succeeds, it seems somewhat easier to delineate what art isn't and when it fails.



Examples are abound. In Nicaragua, Guillermo Vargas put on exhibit a dog tied to a wall without food, supposedly until the poor creature starved to death. Aliza Shvarts, a senior art student at Yale, repeatedly artificially inseminated herself, induced a miscarriage, and harvested the products of the abortions for use as her final senior project. Some examples have achieved greater fame and longevity; Andres Serrano's photograph "Piss Christ," first exhibited in 1989, portrayed a crucifix inside a beaker allegedly filled with the artist's own urine, and remains notorious two decades later.

But is there anything artistic to be admired or appreciated in this lot? Never mind a skill or a beauty – is there even a sense of intellectual courage? And while they have certainly produced their predictable and desired results, has any ever established its use as an expression of creativity? None of these performances demonstrate any of that, nor philosophical insight either.

In fact, unlike their 19th century predecessors Goya and Manet, they don't even set a pretense of artistic ambition at all; these demonstrations are simply hollow manifestations of controversy for their own sake, degenerate mechanisms by which self-important iconoclasts can demonstrate their rebellion. They generally say much more about the performer than the subject of the performance. Unfortunately, this is precisely their point.

Perhaps I am mistaken; perhaps smeared embryos, tortured animals and debased crucifixes are high art. But then we must admit, the membership of such demonstrations rather debauches the entire party, does it not? These displays serve more reasonably as Reduction ad absurdum arguments for what art is not. Someone who, for instance, doesn't love Beethoven as I do – or conversely, who loves Chopin as I cannot – at least treads with me a common ground. I can appreciate and acknowledge the gestures of the latter's études and preludes without admitting their transcendence.

But as for someone who sees artistic merit in the meaningless vulgarities above, the antithesis of art is not kitsch, apparently, but profanity. And with such a person – one who exalts the profane – I share nothing at all.

TO THE POINT

Chinese necessary at KSU

Young people go to college to learn new skills, have new experiences and prepare for a new life. K-State offers more than 250 majors and programs, which help students become more competitive in a fiercely competitive world. However, there is one major that is not offered, and it is one that will be essential in the coming decades. That is, of course, a major in the Chinese language.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

According to infoplease.com, Mandarin Chinese is the most widely spoken language in the world with nearly 1 billion speakers. China's emergence as an economic and political superpower will only increase the importance of the language internationally. If Americans and businesses want to compete in the world market, the Chinese people will have an enormous influence on whether that occurs.

Students going to school in Kansas, have only one option if they wish to pursue a major in Chinese, the University of Kansas.

K-State has had great success with its Modern Languages program. Many students minor or major in Spanish, French and others. Adding another language at K-State can only help the university and its students.

The university does an excellent job of preparing students for the challenges of the real world, but a knowledge of Chinese is a skill that is necessary. K-State should take the proper steps to make Chinese an available major to prepare students even more than it does now.

Besides, the last thing we want to do is send more students to KU.

CITY COMMISSION

City commissioners to receive incident management training

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In compliance with state and federal law, Manhattan city commissioners will receive National Incident Management Systems training during tonight's city commission work session.

The training will cover an overview of the commission's role during an emergency event that requires multi-jurisdictional cooperation, like last winter's ice storm, Chief Training Officer Scott Clark said.

Clark, member of the Manhattan Fire Department, will present the training session to the commission.

"The City of Manhattan is just one of the organizations that would respond," Clark said. "The Fire Department, utilities and public works have also been through this training."

Clark said 99 percent of the emergency calls are handled by the Fire Department, including ambulance calls, house fires and wrecks. The other 1 percent requires other agencies to get involved.

The training helps the community prepare for when these disasters might occur. Clark said that people never hear about NIMS problems where major emergencies occur frequently, like in California and Texas where wildfires break out every year, or in Florida with hurricanes. But, he said, when Katrina hit, everyone was pointing fingers because no one was prepared.

Clark said the ice storm last winter gave the community a practice with using the NIMS.

NIMS IS:
A core set of ...
— Doctrine
— Concepts — Principles
— Terminology
— Organizational processes applicable to all hazards

NIMS IS NOT:
— An operational incident management plan
— A resource allocation plan
— A terrorism/WMD-specific plan
— Designed to address international events

— Federal Emergency Management Agency Web site

The training and frequent flooding helps bring our community together in the spirit of cooperation.

"Our community is really ahead of the game when it comes to compliance," Clark said. "There is a whole list of things the community must do. The training is only one component of compliance."

Some members of the Fire Department receive between 60 and 80 credited hours of training specific to NIMS, Clark said. Where a person ranks in the system will determine how much training is needed by the individual. The commissioners will receive the training that focuses on Incident Command System only.

The training session will begin at 5 p.m., according to the agenda. The work session also will be broadcast on local cable Channel 3.

To implement NIMS, elected and appointed officials should:

— Adopt NIMS for all government agencies and encourage NIMS adoption and use by non-government organizations.

— Adopt NIMS through executive order, proclamation, resolution or legislation as the official all-hazards, incident response system.

Students travel to Oklahoma for Indian culture

By Brandi Brumback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. – A group of 37 students from K-State, K-State-Salina and Fort Hays State traveled to Tahlequah last week to participate in activities that immersed them in an unfamiliar culture.

The three-day lesson on American Indian culture and traditions was planned to help them learn in a way no textbook could.

The 36th-annual Symposium on the American Indian took place April 16-19 at Northeastern State University. The symposium featured various speakers and workshops on a range of topics from indigenous astronomy and languages to basket weaving.

Students also participated in the annual NSU Alumni Powwow, where they were invited to take part in intertribal dancing and watch dancers compete for prizes.

Leslie Hannah, NSU alumnus and assistant professor of English at K-State-Salina, said he has attended the event for years. This was the third time he has made the trip with students.

"I think what I am doing is important, because for three days, students saw what life was like from the Indian side of the fence," he said. "It's a way to build those bridges between cultures that normally don't trust each other very much for different reasons."

Hannah said he hoped to take even more students to the event next year.

Students ate traditional food, participated in storytelling, received powwow dance lessons and toured the Cherokee Nation Tribal Complex, Cherokee Nation Heritage Center and an ancient Cherokee village.

Some students had the opportunity to meet the principal and deputy chiefs of the Cherokee Nation.

Oladipo Fajimolu, sophomore in accounting, attended the trip so he could receive extra credit in his American ethnic studies class. He said he also wanted to learn about American Indian culture and history.

"It's important to learn their history because they were the first people here," he said.

He said he enjoyed the Trail of Tears museum and ancient village tour at the Cherokee Nation Heritage Center, where students were able to learn about the traditional Cherokee way of life.

"It was a very different way of looking at life," said Kate Haggerty, junior in English. "Like the storytelling – those were so much better than the stories when I was a kid."

Haggerty said she went on the trip to fulfill a requirement for an English class. She said before the trip she did not understand what the Cherokee Nation was, but attending the trip gave her a better understanding of their culture.

"I hope the students can take what they've experienced in the last few days and think about it and see that as many differences as there are between this culture and their own, there are also many similarities," Hannah said. "The main thing is we're all human."

Cats start home stand with UC-Irvine today

By Joe Bergkamp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Big 12 Conference is known as one of the premier baseball conferences in the nation, with traditional powers like Texas and Nebraska competing every year for an NCAA Championship.

K-State will get its chance to face off against one of the premier teams in the nation outside the Big 12 on Tuesday, with the University of California-Irvine Anteaters traveling to Manhattan. The first of a two-game series begins at 6:30 tonight at Tointon Family Stadium.

One of coach Brad Hill's primary goals at the beginning of this season was to expose his Wildcat baseball team to a more competitive nonconference schedule. The likes of Creighton and Wichita State, two tradition-rich teams that K-State plays annually, were joined this season by UC-Irvine and Arizona State. Both teams have been ranked in the top 10 nationally at some point in the 2008 season and were participants in the College World Series a year ago.

Junior Lance Hoge pitches during the Oklahoma State game March 30. Hoge will start tonight against No. 11 University of California at Irving.

"It's a great opportunity for our kids to compete in those types of situations," Hill said. "It's good for the program. If you want to take the program to the next level you have to challenge your team. The goal is to take this team to the next level and the upper echelon of the Big 12."

The Wildcats spent last weekend in Lubbock, Texas, where they took two out of three games from the Texas Tech Red Raiders. With the series win, Hill's team moved up into a tie with Kansas for seventh in the Big 12 standings. The starting pitcher for K-State on Tuesday will be junior Lance Hoge. Hoge is 1-3 on the year with a 3.94 ERA and has recorded 19 strikeouts on the year.

The two-game series with UC-Irvine will mark the sixth time this season K-State has matched up in a series against a ranked opponent. UC-Irvine is ranked No. 11 in the nation in the USA Today/

Rowing puts 4 boats in Southern IRA finals

By Brad Dornes
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State rowing team returned home after participating in the Southern Intercollegiate Rowing Association competition over the weekend.

"I am very pleased with how the team performed," said coach Patrick Sweeney. "It was a good solid performance against good competition."

Saturday, the Wildcats were able to get three boats to qualify for the A Finals, including both varsity crews. Both varsity crews placed in the top two of their respective heats while the Second Varsity 8 won its heat.

The Novice 4 team placed third in its preliminary heat, qualifying them for the AB semifinal later that night. During the AB semifinal, the Wildcats finished fourth, which was good enough to qualify them for the B Final on Sunday.

"Our team is still very young," said Heather Hoffman, junior in communication sciences. "We learned that we can push ourselves farther than what we thought we could. It was definitely a step in the right direction."

FOOTBALL

Spring Game shows little for fall season

JOEL JELLISON

If you attended the Purple-White Spring Game on Saturday, you know it was about as exciting as a Week 17 NFL game between a team that has already made the playoffs and a team that's staring a top-five draft pick in the face.

Sure, the game had its great moments, like watching junior Keithen Valentine run all over the White defense for more than 100 yards and seeing sophomore Josh Cherry nail his second attempt at a 51-yard field goal, but the game just lacked the punch to generate excitement for a new football season.

Important offensive players like junior quarterback Josh Freeman and sophomore running back Leon Patton had action limited to the first quarter and early in the second quarter, and no solution was offered for the future of the wide receiver position now that Jordy Nelson has graduated to the next level.

Speaking of receivers, either they or the quarterback just couldn't get in sync Saturday.

There were dropped passes, passes into double and even triple coverage and just downright terrible passes.

It's OK though. The passing offense generated the majority of its yardage through passing interference penalties.

Penalties brings me to my favorite part of the game. Senior kicker Brooks Rossman picked up a personal foul for spiking the ball in front of a referee after a botched snap on a field-goal attempt left the kicker open to a sack. Call it a penalty of frustration, but it was kind of funny.

The game did, however, bring the offensive line into question. Why? Because senior lineman Penisini Liu went down with a leg injury in the last minute of the game as the White team ran down the clock.

Hopefully this injury isn't as bad as it looked on the field.

It is safe to say we can take very little away from what we see in the spring game.

Does Valentine's performance mean every Saturday this fall will be Valentine's Day? Probably not, especially with more players coming in before the fall semester starts, but it does show the team has more to show at running back this season with Patton, Valentine and maybe more from others to come.

I am seriously concerned with what this team has at the wide receiver position, though.

No, we didn't see junior Deon Murphy and what he has to bring back this year, but what we did see were dropped passes from the receivers who saw significant playing time.

Basically, the spring game did nothing for K-State fans wondering if the Wildcats will rebound from last season, a year that peaked midway through the season with the win over Texas.

Time will tell how the Wildcats have changed from last season, in what areas they have improved and in what areas they need to get better.

Correction to equestrian national champs story

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Monday's story in the Collegian about the K-State equestrian team's final meet, the varsity equestrian national championships, contained several errors.

The team finished fifth overall. The Western team did capture third-place, with a 6-1 victory over Oklahoma State.

In English competition, No. 7-seeded K-State defeated No. 10 seed Delaware State before dropping to No. 2 Texas A&M – the eventual runner up – and No. 6 Baylor, who captured sixth place.

Senior Whitney Snyder, freshman Julie Wolfert and juniors Jenny Giraldin and Leslie Yates all captured points for the Wildcats against Baylor.

Though the Wildcats tied the Bears, they lost in the overall point total, 937-1,005.

In the Western division, No. 5-seeded K-State beat No. 12 seed University of Tennessee-Martin and No. 4 seed Texas A&M before losing to No. 1 seed and eventual champion Texas Christian.

K-State received third place overall after beating No. 3-seeded Oklahoma State in a consolation bracket.

Junior Alyssa Freeman, senior Lindsey Salsbury and sophomore Laura Browne all captured points in the horsemanship portion against Oklahoma State, while sophomore Morgan Campbell, freshman Alecia Zimbelman, Freeman and junior Tara Hallan all scored more points than their Cowgirl counterparts.

The Collegian regrets these errors.

KU's Rush, Arthur declare

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE, Kan. – Brandon Rush is headed to the NBA for sure this time. Darrell Arthur may be going with him. Mario Chalmers? He hasn't made up his mind.

RUSH

Two of Kansas' three biggest stars declared themselves eligible for the draft on Thursday, less than two weeks after helping lead the Jayhawks to their first national title in 20 years.

Rush, who lost his college eligibility by declaring for the NBA Draft a second time, is shopping for an agent and likely will start working out for NBA teams in about a month.

Arthur has yet to hire an agent, leaving open the possibility of returning to Kansas if it appears he isn't going to be drafted high enough.

Chalmers, who hit the shot that got Kansas into overtime in the national title game, is still debating whether to declare for the draft or come back for his senior season.

As a high-schooler, Rush said he would have preferred to skip college altogether and head straight for the NBA. His game wasn't ready, so he enrolled at Kansas.

Rush was set to bolt for the NBA last year after his sophomore season, but tore his ACL during a pickup game and pulled himself out of the draft.

The MVP of the Big 12 tournament, Rush is projected as a late first-round, early second-round pick in the June 26 draft.

Mix and match

Playlists help sort music for different tasks

ERIC DAVIS

Music is one of the greatest parts of life and playlists are the logical extension of musical bliss.

The right playlist can make a great day better or a bad day worse. There is, however, a fine line that needs to be walked when creating your own list of musical amazingness.

WALKING/RIDING TO CAMPUS:

My walking – or riding – to-campus mix also could be labeled as my "wild card" mix. Basically, I just play what I feel. Generally I ride my bike to campus and everywhere else I go, and it's hard for me not to be in a good mood when I'm on my Trek 820.

The songs that comprise the list are from bands like Cake, Incubus and Paul Simon. You know, songs that you can just cruise to. Really any music I can sing along to while I'm walking or riding my bike.

"Duel Of The Fates" John Williams
"Bold As Love" John Mayer
"At the Zoo" Simon and Garfunkel
"Diamonds On the Soles Of Her Shoes" Paul Simon
"Forever and Ever, Amen" Randy Travis
"Golden Brown" The Stranglers
"Another Kind Of Green" John Mayer Trio
"Another Travelin' Song" Bright Eyes
"New Soul" Yael Naim
"Streetcorner Symphony" Rob Thomas

ROAD TRIPS

Another time good playlists come in handy is during a road trip. When making a road-trip mix, it is important to keep the people you will be traveling with in mind. You don't want a bunch of songs that no one on the trip likes. It is also a good idea to pick songs that are easy to talk over, or rather, that won't get in the way of conversation. The Beatles are a good choice when making these playlists. Their songs are popular enough that many people know them and low-key enough to not get in the way.

"Into the Great Wide Open" Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers
"I Feel Fine" The Beatles
"Fun, Fun, Fun" The Beach Boys
"I Gotta Move" Ben Kweller
"Forgiven" Ben Harper and the Innocent Criminals
"Kodachrome" Paul Simon
"Creep" Radiohead
"Peace Frog" The Doors
"Rain King" Counting Crows
"Highway to Hell" AC/DC

STUDYING

When I'm studying, I can't stand silence. However, if I'm listening to music with words, I get distracted and can't concentrate. There is an easy solution: movie scores and orchestral movements.

I love orchestral music, and John Williams – my favorite composer of all time – has written some of my all-time favorite songs. The suites he writes are absolute gold and coincidentally, make for great studying music.

Also, Beethoven and Chopin have some great pieces of music.

"Mischief Managed" from "Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban" John Williams
"The Throne Room/End Titles" From "Star Wars: A New Hope" John Williams
"A New Hope and End Credits" from "Star Wars Episode III: Revenge Of the Sith" John Williams
"Augie's Great Municipal Band and End Credits" from "Star Wars Episode I: The Phantom Menace" John Williams
"Symphony No. 7 in A Major, Op. 92:IV Allegro con brio" From "The Darjeeling Limited" Fritz Reiner
"Moonlight Sonata" Beethoven
"Fur Elise" Beethoven
"The Knight Bus" from "Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban" John Williams
"Arco Arena" Cake
"Aunt Marge's Waltz" from "Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban" John Williams

WORKOUT

It usually takes me a great deal of motivation to get myself to work out beyond riding my bike, and when I do go to the gym, I need a great mix of fast, upbeat songs to keep me motivated.

I have never been a big fan of heavy music or Metallica, but both genre's fit nicely here. When some songs come on, I just can't sit still.

"Still Take You Home" Artic Monkeys
"No Leaf Clover" Metallica
"Privilege" Incubus
"This is the New Shit" Marilyn Manson
"Light Grenades" Incubus
"Toxicity" System Of a Down
"Dazed and Confused" Led Zeppelin
"Bodysnatchers" Radiohead
"Around the World" Red Hot Chili Peppers
"Icky Thump" The White Stripes

ACCESS HOLLYWOOD'S CELEBRITY NEWS

LINDSAY LOHAN SLIPS ON SOBRIETY, CAUGHT DRINKING IN NYC CLUB

LOS ANGELES, Calif. –

Lindsay Lohan has slipped on sobriety, according to a report in People.

The actress, who completed a third rehab stint late last year, was drinking Grey Goose vodka and Red Bull cocktails as she hung out at a New York City club with DJ friend Samantha Ronson, People reported.

Lohan turned up at the Times Square Hawaiian Tropic Zone, where Ronson was spinning the late set – midnight to 4 AM.

"She was seen hanging out with friends, smoking cigarettes, drinking Grey Goose [vodka] and Red Bull, and just supporting her friend, who's the DJ," People's Julie Dam told Access Hollywood.

A representative for Lohan was not immediately available for comment, however if the report is confirmed, this won't be the first time Lohan apparently publicly lapsed on sobriety.

She was captured on film, taking a swig from a suspected bottle of alcohol during a party in Capri, Italy, in the run up to New Year's Eve. Lohan called her sponsor following the incident, her representative said at the time.

Just last week, in an interview on "The Billy Bush Show," the actress said sobriety had changed her.

"Has it been easy to not drink or party at all?" Billy asked.

"Yeah, it's been, you know, I am used to the way I am in my life now," she said. "I am a different person."

MAYER, TIMBERLAKE AT DIAZ FATHER'S FUNERAL

LOS ANGELES, Calif. –

Cameron Diaz received some support from her friends, including ex-boyfriends Justin Timberlake and John Mayer on Sunday, as the actress and her family held a memorial service for her father, Emilio.

Emilio died of pneumonia last Tuesday. He was 58.

The service was held at Mahe in Seal Beach, in Orange County, Calif.

According to People, most of the guests arrived to the celebratory memorial in nontraditional attire.

"Hardly [anyone] wore black. Lots of people were wearing Hawaiian shirts. It looked more like a party," a source told People.

Inside the event, attended by friends and family, people could be heard chanting Emilio's name.

Timberlake and Mayer arrived to the event separately, and both stayed until most people started leaving around 4 p.m.

Prior to the conclusion of the ceremony, Diaz spoke about her father to the group, People reported.

Over the weekend, a representative for the Diaz family told Access Hollywood that in lieu of flowers, the family was asking donations be made to Surfrider.org or Reefcheck.org in Emilio's name.

Both organizations are nonprofits, dedicated to oceanic conservation.

Following her father's death, Diaz released the following statement to Access Hollywood:

"My mom, sister and I are deeply appreciative of the overwhelming outpouring of love and support during this difficult time for us and all of our family. My dad was loved by so many people, and his humor and spirit will always live on in our hearts."

ESPN poll with a 24-9 record. Just a year ago, UC-Irvine qualified for its first College World Series and posted a 2-2 record before being eliminated by future champions Oregon State.

"RPI is so important in college baseball, and preparation for the Big 12 is so important that you have to play competition just to get there," Hill said.

ROWING | Big 12 Invitational next

The second day of the event put the Wildcats up against tougher competition.

The Novice 4 crew started the day off placing sixth in the B Final, while the Novice 8 team placed fifth in the first A Final race.

The JV team was able to come away with a victory in its A Final race. The Wildcats won the race a full five seconds ahead of second-place Purdue University.

Finally, the K-State Varsity 8 crew placed third in its A Final race just three seconds behind the Southern IRA overall event winner Purdue.

"We showed up as a team," said Jennifer Flannigan, junior in kinesiolgy. "We worked as a team and by doing that allowed us to succeed."

Next up for the Wildcat rowing team will be the Big 12 Conference Invitational on May 3 at Austin, Texas.

"The Big 12 Invitational is going to be tough," coach Sweeney said. "Texas and KU are very deep, but hopefully we can carry over some momentum from this weekend."

CHINA | KSU offers only Chinese minor studies

are experiencing life in China, there has been an increase in the number of Chinese students coming to K-State.

Due in large part to the university opening a recruitment office in China, the number of Chinese students at K-State has gone from just a few to more than 200 over the past year, Wu said.

Studying at K-State comes at a heavy cost for Chinese undergraduates. They must pay out-of-state tuition, which becomes extremely expensive because the yuan, China's currency, is very low compared to the U.S. dollar, Wu said.

"Chinese families work a lifetime to give their children an education," Wu said.

Kebing Yu, graduate student in mechanical engineering, said he came to K-State after hearing about future projects that fit his interests. He said he also thought he could benefit from studying in the United States.

"I think I benefit most from the method and attitude of research here," he said.

CULTURAL EDUCATION

Providing opportunities for American and Chinese cultures and education to meet on campus is important to Wu, she said.

"I feel, as an education provider, that we owe it to the future of our students," she said. "There should definitely be an increased emphasis for students to learn Chinese language and culture."

Haug said living in Kansas makes it difficult to learn about Chinese culture, but activities related to her Chinese language classes – including meeting with a language partner from China – have helped her understand more about Chinese culture, she said.

"In class sometimes we practice calligraphy and listen to Chinese music," she said. "Last year, my professor even invited us to her house to teach us how to make dumplings."

The ever-growing Chinese Student and Scholars Association also offers opportunities for American students to learn about China, Yu said, who is a former CSSA president.

America and China are two very different countries and the cultural differences are considerable, Yu said. For example, Chinese people tend to speak more formally to their elders and are more modest than Americans about receiving compliments, he said.

However, there are similarities.

"I would say both Chinese and Americans love their own country very much," he said.

The differences between Chinese and American students will be more easily understood as more students study the Chinese language and more Chinese students are present on K-State's campus, Wu said.

"We're on the right path," she said. "We just need to keep on going."

GREEK | Councils plan to host events together

keep the organization's focuses separate.

"I would argue an increase in racially charged incidents on white campus in the past year," he said in a telephone interview. "Nooses appear everywhere, and black face parties are still happening on college campuses. There is still a racially tense environment on white campuses."

These occurrences have caused an increase in numbers of BGLO's on predominately white campuses in recent years, said Kimbrough, a historian in black greek culture.

"These types of organizations are what black students are looking for to reaffirm who they are," he said.

WORKING TOGETHER

Andy Gigstad, president of IFC, said he has an optimistic view on the growth of this partnership. He said if the two greek bodies can come together, they will set an example for diversity across campus.

Recently, at the NPHC Step Show, numerous traditional greek organizations came out to support the BLGOs.

Gigstad said he hopes the BGLOs will return the favor when traditional greeks have campus-wide events. "It has to be both ways," he said.

Anthony Carter, member of Alpha Tau Omega, who became the first black Interfraternity Council president at K-State last year, can be credited for initiating the urge for the organizations to work together.

"We started an initiative for our councils to lay the foundation to bridge the gap by starting the discussion between the leadership in all the groups," Carter said.

BGLOs were started in the early 19th century by blacks who were not accepted into white fraternities and sororities. Now that blacks are able to join traditional, predominately white greek houses, many in the black greek organizations look down on blacks who join traditional greek houses, said NPHC president Thomas. "It's like betrayal," she said.

However, Carter said since traditional greek life is open to anyone, it should not matter which side students choose.

"I think I am representing our race in SGA and by being the black president in the IFC at K-State," he said. "Every area needs to be hit – can't be confined to a certain area."

As for the lack of connection between the organizations, Carter said there is an importance for IFC, PHC and NPHC on K-State's campus and they were all founded for different reasons.

"It is important to remember and to respect everyone's heritage and uniqueness," said Scott Jones, director of K-State Greek Affairs.

He said when groups come together, the larger group can sometimes overshadow and swallow up the smaller group.

"That would be unfortunate," he said. "I think whatever comes out of our efforts, it is important to keep those things that make us who we are in a multicultural world and make sure those traditions are respected and celebrated and are not just hodgepodged together."

THE FUTURE

K-State has expressed an interest in forming a multicultural greek council, in which members of IFC, PHC and NPHC will come together in a more formal manner, Jones said.

"I think this will maximize our shared experience – rather than having two separate experiences," Jones said.

One significant hurdle is that the organizations are advised out of different offices. However, he said he does understand the separation because of the importance of the cultural needs of students are being met. NPHC is ran out of the Diversity and Dual Career Development Offices and is separate from Greek Affairs, he added.

The two groups have collaborated in the past with bringing in educational speakers such as Coach Herman Boone from the movie "Remember the Titans," and are planning some events in the fall, he said.

Though Gigstad remained adamant on working on the traditionally severed relationship between the two bodies, Kimbrough said he would argue that nationally, students at predominately white campuses don't have an interest in understanding.

"They have the attitude, 'You guys need to come fit in,'" he said.

Kimbrough said the major differences between the two organizations have caused a lack of connection on college campuses.

"Traditional greeks view their greek experience different," he said. "They have two separate focuses."

Careem Gladney, president of Alpha Phi Alpha, said he enjoyed the meeting but is still undecided on the focus and purpose of the organizations working together.

"Right now, I am undecided," he said. "Actions speak louder than words but it seems like they are genuinely interested."

Gladney said that it can be easy to start initial conversation, but it will get harder over the course to maintain a growing relationship.

"There are going to be big hurdles in the future," Gladney said. "We all have a lot of work in our own organizations to do."

Gladney said the differences between the organizations are few, and he thinks the key bridging those differences will be focusing on their similarities instead.

Gigstad said he hopes this first meeting is a sign of what will come in the future.

"In order to maintain this relationship, it is going to take leadership and vision," he said. "It is something that we must continue to work on and hopefully we will get to the point we want in the future."

City reflections

Rosa Hickman, Manhattan resident, has lived in her house at 816 Yuma St. for 65 years. She was born and raised in Manhattan and said "the friendly atmosphere of Manhattan has never changed."

"I could never leave Manhattan. The people here are so good to me – everybody has always been so nice. Everybody has always looked after everybody."

Life-long Manhattan resident shares story

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On the rickety porch of a quaint, white house, Rosa Hickman gazes serenely out at her familiar, comfortable street. Surrounded by her well-kept and vibrant flowers, her gentle, crinkled eyes glint with a genuine love and reflection of her life in Manhattan.

Hickman, 85, has lived in her house at 816 Yuma St. for 65 years. She was born and raised in Manhattan, and said the close relationships she made in the town had persuaded her to stay as an adult. Hickman said her strong faith, unconditional adoration for others and lifelong involvement with Manhattan have led her to live a fulfilled life.

She moved into her current house in 1943, three months after her only child, now 65, was born. While she was in the hospital after delivering her daughter, her husband's cousin sold the family his house on Yuma Street. Hickman said the cousin wanted her family to have stability with their new baby girl, though he probably didn't realize he was selling her the house she would continue to reside in throughout the years.

"I could never leave Manhattan," she said, her grin stretching across both her cheeks. "I love it here. The people here are so good to me – everyone has always been so nice. I have a lot of friends here, and everybody has always looked after everybody."

Hickman said Manhattan and Yuma Street have become much busier and urbanized over the years. She said when she was younger, the town was mostly made of farmland and her street was a dirt road. Hickman said the friendly atmosphere of Manhattan, however, has never changed.

"Manhattan used to have horses and cows grazing all over the place," she said. "Everyone had chickens, goats and dogs running wild all over their yards. Now, it's very busy with lots of traffic and people. Even back then, though, everybody was helpful to everybody else. It was a nice community, and everybody shared everything they had."

Even when black people who lived in Manhattan were segregated from white people, Hickman, an African-American, said she never had a problem with the segregation or eventual integration with white people because of her love of people. She attended Douglass Elementary, an all-black grade school, until the schools were integrated before she started seventh grade. She said blacks were only allowed to live from Yuma Street to the Pottawatomie County

GUN DEBATE

Students discuss concealed carry on K-State campus

By Holly Campbell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The hot-button issue of whether conceal and carry should be allowed on K-State's campus is being discussed with a week-long protest and a debate Thursday.

K-State Students for Concealed Carry on Campus is participating in a nation wide protest, in which students who support allowing licensed concealed handgun carriers to bring their weapons to campus go to class wearing empty holsters, said Bryan Little, K-State SCCC's leader and senior in secondary social studies education.

"I will be wearing an empty holster all week signifying that I and others are defenseless if the case of something like [what happened at] Virginia Tech or Northern Illinois University happened here on our campus," said Kansas President of the Federation of SCCC Ryan Willcott, freshman in pre-professional business administration.

K-State SCCC is a local chapter of the national SCCC on Campus group and has been a registered K-State organization since February.

SCCC's stated objectives are to educate the public about concealed carry and push state legislatures and school administrations to allow concealed carry on campuses, which are usually gun-free zones, according to the group's official Web site, www.concealedcampus.org. K-State's weapons policy prohibits the possession of any weapon on campus, according to the Student Handbook.

There will be a debate on concealed carry from 6-7 p.m. in the K-State Student Union Room 212 Thursday. The debate is unaffiliated with K-State SCCC, but will discuss issues related to concealed weapons on campus, said protest organizer Douglas Shane, freshman in animal sciences and industry.

Kris Kobach, Kansas GOP Chairman, and Patricia Stoneking, concealed carry instructor, are expected to attend the debate as well as Manhattan City Commissioner Bob Strawn, who is a moderate on the concealed carry issue, Shane said. Shane has not been able to confirm anyone opposed to campus concealed carry who will appear at the debate, but debate organizers hope to find someone to represent that side of the issue, he said.

The debate is open to anyone and attendees can submit questions to the speakers, he said.

Kansas residents were first allowed to apply for concealed carry licenses in July 2006, and the first licenses were issued in January 2007, according to the Office of the Kansas Attorney General Web site, www.ksag.org. Carriers must be 21 or older, undergo concealed carry training and face restrictions based on their criminal records, according to the Web site.

"I know this is a controversial issue," Shane said. "So the more people who come and learn the facts about it, the better."

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

K-State Students for Concealed Carry on Campus will be participating in a protest where they will wear their empty holsters on campus all week. There will be a debate from 6-7 p.m. Thursday in the K-State Student Union.

Private Kansas citizens will soon be allowed to own automatic weapons, some shotguns

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius signed a bill Monday allowing private citizens to purchase fully automatic weapons and short-barreled shotguns with a simple background check. The bill will take effect July 1.

According to the bill, possession of automatic weapons, short-barreled shot guns and silencers will be legal once the bill becomes law.

The bill was met with optimism from some Kansans.

"It doesn't show the naivety that semi-automatic is less dangerous than an automatic weapon," Brent Keltner, former firearms instructor, said.

Most states do not have laws banning fully automatic gun ownership. Kansans purchasing firearms must comply with federal guidelines.

"This law allows gun collectors to lawfully process class three weapons," Brittany Stiffler, assistant press secretary for Sebelius, said. "Governor Sebelius carefully reviewed this bill."

Stiffler said Sebelius received support for the bill.

"She was not inundated with requests from law enforcement to veto like she was with concealed carry," Stiffler said.

There will be a process that everyone wanting to purchase these guns must follow and certain criteria must be met.

The individual has to submit a form to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms for background approval and have the local sheriff sign a statement that the person would not use the gun unlawfully, Stiffler said

SEBELIUS

In 1994, former President Bill Clinton signed a bill that banned 19 types of assault weapons. In September 2004, President George W. Bush allowed this bill to expire.

The bill Sebelius signed has many supporters as well as opponents who believe allowing anyone the power to purchase automatic weapons is dangerous.

"People against the bill are not familiar with all the facts," Keltner, senior in social science, said. "It's the movies that make automatic weapons look dangerous when they are not any more dangerous than semi-automatic weapons."

Guns are purchased for reasons like hunting, protection and collecting purposes. For some it is a hobby, while others trade them.

Keltner said he believes gun owners should be allowed to collect and own the guns of their choice.

"It's one less thing we are being limited from," he said.

K-State researchers find connections with obesity, cancer

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Genetic mutations, smoking, heavy drinking and negative environmental influences are usually listed as the most common causes of cancer. Now K-State researchers are finding that obesity can be another leading factor.

According to the American Institute for Cancer Research, obesity is dangerous because it comes from a lasting energy imbalance, which increases a person's storage of fat and circulating amounts of fatty acids.

These higher levels of fatty acids can cause resistance to insulin, a hormone essential to regulating the body's metabolism. Insulin resistance is linked to the development of certain cancers, diabetes and heart disease.

George Wang, a K-State associate professor of human nutrition, has been doing research on this topic for several years. According to Wang's research, controlling body weight does affect how a body works at the level of cellular growth, which is important when it comes to researching cancer prevention.

The research project, sponsored by the National Institutes of Health, is also being worked on by Richard Baybutt, assistant professor of human nutritionl; Mark Haub, associate professor of human nutrition; and Shie-Shien Yang, professor of statistics.

— Career and Employment Services handout

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As students prepare for graduation and summer internships, they must leave their college lifestyles and goals behind and take on new goals and habits for the workplace, said a career expert at a seminar Tuesday afternoon.

Assistant Director of Career and Employment Services Tom Hollinberger gave a presentation titled "How To Succeed as a New Professional" on Tuesday in the K-State Student Union.

During the presentation, he used handouts with feedback from previous graduate students and several technical professionals who recruit at K-State.

Hollinberger gave advice on the distinctions between student life and work life.

In college, he said, goals for classes are clear with a system of what to do to attain a grade. Also, professors are readily available for frequent and concrete feedback, whereas in the work environment, there are fuzzy goals and unstructured ways to attain them.

He also said students mostly rely on solo performances for grades in college, but at work, people have to be good team players.

"You are going to do a lot more on teams that you ever did before," Hollinberger said. "That's why interpersonal skills are crucial to excel in the first year on the job."

Hollinberger stressed that the first year on the job can make or break a career.

"Your first year as a professional is a distinct and important phase of adapting and learning. Take it seriously and give it the respect it deserves," he said.

Hollinberger also shared key factors for becoming a successful employee – be flexible, be willing to learn and ask questions, accept tasks slightly out of a comfort zone, and take responsibility for mistakes.

He emphasized the necessity of separation between personal and professional life, where "Aggieville topics" would not be really acceptable and could result in an undeserved "bad reputation" among colleagues.

Being a new person in a company is stressful, but it has an advantage as well, Hollinberger said.

"It's OK to be a rookie, so wear this label proudly," he said. "They [employers] will cut you a little slack on productivity. A person should use that 'grace period' to learn and adjust."

As a K-State alumnus, he said he aims to promote a positive image of the university.

"Make K-State proud, because now you are a part of the K-State brand," Hollinberger said. "Employers are coming to campus to find hardworking, friendly and down-to-earth individuals."

About 30 students came to the event, mostly from the Colleges of Arts and Sciences and Engineering.

"I liked that [Hollinberger] was direct and straightforward," said Makenzie Provorse, junior in chemistry. "He really hit some points. I never thought before how much different student and work culture are."

Molly Hamm, junior in English and secondary education, said she plans to work in the nonprofit sector in the future, and she found the presentation useful and informative.

"The handout is great – it is something I'm able to keep and come back to it at my job when I graduate," she said.

Former President Carter embarrasses self in Middle East

BRETT KING

Parents have always told their children to respect and take care of their elders. In the dusk of their lives, elderly folks might suffer from senility. According to the Merriam-Webster dictionary, the definition of senile is "relating to, exhibiting or characteristic of old age: exhibiting a loss of cognitive abilities."

With this definition as the base of examination, it is time for the family of former president Jimmy Carter to call the men in white pants and jackets to escort grandpa back to the home.

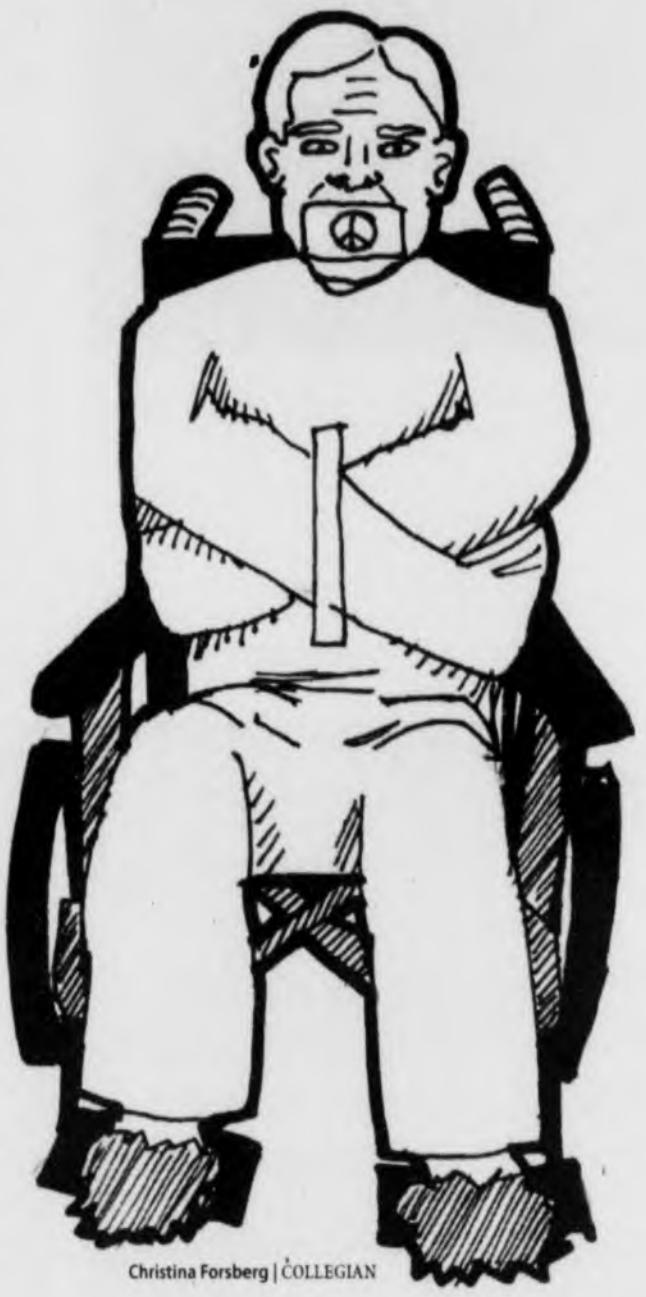
For the past week, Carter has been jetting across the globe in hopes of repairing relations between the United States, Palestine and Israel. On a trip to the Middle East, during which he had no authority to represent the United States, Carter met with Hamas leaders. According to the Web site for the Council on Foreign Relations, Hamas is an extremist group that worked closely with the former terrorist leader Yasser Arafat. In 2006, Hamas dominated the Palestinian Authority's legislative elections to gain control of the Palestinian government.

Due to the Bush Doctrine and years of commitment to Israel, the United States has avoided communication with the Hamas government. But have no fear, here comes President Carter with hopes of orchestrating a peace deal to fix the whole situation.

In 1979, Carter was successful in orchestrating a peace agreement between Egypt and Israel that has since held strong, but even a blind kid hits a baseball every once in a while.

The one-term president, who embarrassed the United States on the global scale, believes he is the peacemaker of the Middle East. Perhaps in his old age, Carter has forgotten what happens when he tries to "talk" with extremist groups, as evidenced by the U.S. embassy hostage debacle in Iran in 1979.

The Associated Press reported on April 21 that Carter announced Hamas was willing "to accept the right of the Jewish state to 'live as a neighbor next door in peace.'" Khaled Mashaal, a top Hamas leader who met with Carter, said the group was prepared to offer a "10-year truce if [Israel] withdraws from all lands seized in the 1967 war."



How gracious of the murderous thugs to offer peace for only 10 years as long as Israel gives up half the city of Jerusalem and other land holdings it acquired from a war it did not start.

In another Associated Press article published April 21, only a few hours after Carter proclaimed his efforts a success, Hamas decided to reject Carter's suggestion to stop firing rockets into Israel for only one month to generate goodwill. But apparently we should still trust Carter when he says Hamas is willing to make a peace deal.

After this backstabbing action, it is no surprise Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert rejected a meeting with Carter on this trip.

Carter is no President Nixon opening up China to relations with the United States after leaving office, and he cannot rewrite his flaws as a president with more stupidity. President Carter, please recognize the signs of senility and stay on your peanut farm.

History repeats itself with economics of Iraq war

In recent days, there has been a lot of speculation about the state of the U.S. economy. With the words "recession" and "inflation" flashing on the TV screen over and over again, it is no longer a secret that our economy is in bad shape and in need of recovery. Possible reasons for the economic decline range from the increase in housing prices to conglomerate "conspiracies."

Christina Forsberg
COLLEGIAN

However, one reason that is becoming the center of considerable debate is, once again, the war in Iraq. A CNN/Opinion Research poll conducted from March 14-16, the fifth anniversary of the beginning of Operation Iraqi Freedom, showed that 71 percent of Americans believe the war in Iraq is the reason for the condition of the economy.

Even America's left and right wings have joined hands to support the idea.

"If we can spend $10 billion a month rebuilding Iraq," Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., stated at an Alliance for American Manufacturing forum on April 14, "we can spend $15 billion a year in our own country to put Americans back to work and strengthen the long-term competitiveness of our economy."

Reuters reported on April 9 that Sen. George Voinovich, R-Ohio, told Gen. David Petraeus before Congress, "We're kind of bankrupting this country," about the war's effect on the economy.

There it is – no secret anymore. Then again, it's no surprise either. It has always been a burden for wars to keep world economies afloat. A history lesson with a lot of oil could help us understand it.

GRADY BOLDING

Deborah Halber, correspondent for News Office, stated in a March 23, 2007, article that following the Yom Kippur War of 1973, Middle Eastern nations in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) halted the export of oil to Western nations because of the West's support of Israel during the war. The end result was long lines at gas pumps in the United States, known in history books as the 1973 Oil Crisis.

Nearly a decade later, Iraqi troops under Saddam Hussein stormed across the Iranian border in September 1980, beginning the decade-long Iran-Iraq War. WTRG Economics gives a detailed history on its Web site of how after both the Iranian Revolution of 1979 and the beginning of the Iran-Iraq War, oil prices doubled from $14 to $36 a barrel. Sadly, those were the good old days.

Then, another decade later, Saddam's troops pored into southern Kuwait. The Western world and a coalition of Arabian nations retaliated in a series of operations which is now known as the Persian Gulf War. David Chapman said in a Nov. 19, 2002, editorial in the Gold Eagle that oil prices hit a total of $40 a barrel at the height of the war. To top it all off, the Associated Foreign Press reported on May 23, 2004 that the United States spent $61 billion overall for military operations during the Gulf War.

Finally, in March 2003, under speculation that Saddam Hussein possessed weapons of mass destruction, President Bush gave the green light to – well, you know. Veronique de Rugy stated in the May 2008 edition of Reason Magazine that "the total price tag for America's present wars will rise to at least $822 billion." I can clearly say that I officially miss the '90s.

In retrospect, the war has always had a big role in the economic crisis and it will continue to do so, whether we leave or stay in Iraq. It's not just conditions in Iraq that's causing the economic downturn, though. As long as conditions remain tumultuous in the entire Middle East, especially if U.S. interests are involved, one of the biggest casualties will continue to be our wallets.

TO THE POINT

Students should utilize CES

Though its office is located in Holtz Hall, students pass by every day unaware of the benefits Career and Employment Services provide. CES offers career events to practice interviewing, planning and visual appeal for scoring the perfect job, but attendance at these events continues to be low. Also, the events are organized to meet a college student's schedule. They are informal, well-publicized and timed for short in-and-out service. So why do students continually miss the CES bandwagon?

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

One reason is students might think landing a future job will not require any outside help. However, most employers say using connections and networking are always the key to finding a job. Searching the Internet or using a job search Web site might not be enough of a connection to find a fulfilling job. Anybody can post a false job listing on the Internet. At CES, reliable companies want to hire K-State students.

Students might not want to face the reality of job searching. But the truth is four years fly by faster than one can ever imagine. CES can even be utilized by students not searching for a job. CES offers tips for freshmen to begin their job journey through senior year.

The student body needs to take it upon themselves to open the doors of Holtz Hall and find the opportunities at CES. This office is an important tool for K-State and should be used by students.

CITY COMMISSION

City commissioners undergo ICS training

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City commissioners spent two hours learning their roles in the event of a major incident Tuesday night. Chief Safety Officer Scott Clark presented the training on Incident Command System within the National Incident Management System.

"Overall, the whole idea of [ICS] is coordination and organization," Clark said.

Clark defined a major incident as an event that happens in the city, which might be human or natural in origin, and requires some sort of response to prevent or minimize loss of life. Examples of incidents include car accidents, fires, ice storms, hurricanes, terrorist attacks or special events.

"We have had lots of practice with [special events]," Clark said. "A good example is every K-State football game."

Clark said NIMS and ICS began in California during the 1970s to help coordinate agencies involved with combating wildfires. NIMS, originally named "Fire Scope," has spread across the country over the years. NIMS has since been adapted to cover any type of incident, not just wildfires.

NIMS provides accountability, communication and planning in the event of an incident. NIMS' purpose is to ensure safety, achievement of tactics and proper resources use. In response to September 11, President George W. Bush created the Department of Homeland Security, Clark said, which implemented NIMS and the National Response Plan. NIMS affects all government agencies from local levels to national levels, while NRP affects only state and national levels.

The senior official's roles are to provide the incident commander with policy guidance, mission support, direction, resource coordination and authority. In the city of Manhattan, City Manager Ron Fehr said he usually assumes the role of senior official. Fehr informs the commission about the situauation during a special emergency meeting in which policy decisions must be made.

LEVELS OF INCIDENTS:

Type 5: Local Village, Town, Township
Example: car accident, house fire

Type 4: City, County, Fire District
Example: grass fire, flooding

Type 3: State, Metropolitan Area
Example: Oklahoma City bombing

Type 2: State, National Example: Hurricane Katrina

Type 1: State, National
Example: Sept. 11 attacks

K-State Relay for Life raises more than $50,000

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Giving hope to cancer patients was the motivation for K-State students and Manhattan community members to raise more than $50,000 this year through the annual Relay for Life.

The fundraiser is a nationwide event organized by the American Cancer Society. K-State was host to its own Relay for Life on April 11-12 at Ahearn Field House.

Members could raise money for Relay for Life in many ways. People sent e-mails, asked for donations online or wrote letters to family and friends. However, the most popular method was selling luminaries, candles, which sold for $10 to support people affected by cancer, Trini Najera, chair for K-State's Relay for Life and senior in family studies and human services, said.

Many students who participated in the event did so for personal reasons. Maura Mills, graduate student in psychology, raised the most money for Relay for Life out of the 364 participants, raising more than $1,000 by herself in honor of her mother. Her team, which only had four members compared to an average of eight to 15 members, raised more than $2,000.

Since her mother was diagnosed with a rare form of cancer that causes melanomia of the internal central nervous system, Mills said she sent letters asking for donations to friends and family.

"It's nice to have a lot of support from people who know my mother," she said. "It's just something that I can do from far away to support her and let her know I'm here for her."

Relay for Life usually starts at 6 p.m. – when the sun begins to set – to represent cancer patients' views of life when they were first informed of the disease, Mills said.

During dark hours, people walk to represent patients becoming tired from their sicknesses. The event ends at 6 a.m. the next day when the sun rises again and symbolizes the hope of cancer patients after treatment, Mills said.

The money raised goes to the American Cancer Society, and most of it helps fund research. Relay for Life even helped fund research for the HPV vaccine.

"It's a great way to represent what is going on and bring new hope to [cancer research]," Mills said.

UC-IRVINE 4, K-STATE 3

Never enough

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Above: Outfielder Jordan Cruz runs for first base after connecting on a pitch Tuesday night in Tointon Family Stadium against UC-Irvine. Cruz had one run, one hit and batted in one in the Wildcats' 4-3 loss. Below: A pitch by Lance Hoge sails toward a UC-Irvine batter in the fourth inning of K-State's loss to the Anteaters at Tointon Family Stadium. Despite holding UC-Irvine to four runs, the Cats still couldn't gather enough offense to overtake Irvine and lost 4-3.

Wildcats fall to ranked UC-Irvine despite homefield advantage

By Mike DeVader
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team came back to the comfortable confines of Tointon Family Stadium after their four-game road trip, but being on their home field wasn't enough as the Wildcats fell to the University of California at Irvine Anteaters 4-3 Tuesday evening.

UC Irvine (25-9) came into the contest against the Wildcats having lost three of its last four games, but calmly took control of the game and never looked back, looking like the team that participated in the 2007 College World Series. The Anteaters, ranked 11th in the USA/ESPN top 25, went down quietly in the first inning, but added three single runs in the next three innings.

UC Irvine took the lead resulting from back-to-back hits. Designated hitter Tony Asaro hit a double and was brought home on a single off the bat of the following batter, Josh Tavelli, who later hit a solo homer to left to put his team up three runs.

"[UC Irvine] made some nice adjustments," said K-State baseball coach Brad Hill. "We didn't give up the big inning, but their batters just fight hard."

Anteater's starting pitcher, Matt Dufour, was on his game as he pitched four and two-thirds innings, not giving up a single hit. He gave up four walks, but none of them hurt him.

Hill said he thought the Anteater pitchers performed well, getting the outs when they needed them the most.

"Their staff ERA is under three," Hill said. "That's unheard of in college baseball and they have a great system."

The Wildcats (18-21) had their struggles handling UC-Irvine pitching and couldn't manage a hit until the bottom of the sixth inning. Third baseman Carter Jurica was able to break up the no-hitter with a line drive to left. Next batter Jordan Cruz immediately capitalized on Jurica's hit by bringing him home from second with an RBI single.

K-State plated another run in the sixth off the bat of Nate Tenbrink and cut the lead to 3-2, but the one-run deficit was as close as they would get.

The Wildcats biggest threat came in the seventh from catcher Rob Vaughn, but his liner to left was robbed by a sliding catch on the warning track.

"I thought we had momentum coming off the last inning," Hill said. "We just didn't get very good at-bats in the seventh."

With both teams scoring single runs in the eighth, the stage was set for a thrilling finish, but the Anteaters used their big-game experience to squelch a Wildcat comeback.

Justin Bloxom struck out looking to lead off the ninth, and two batters later, UC Irvine recorded the winning out. K-State concludes its two-game home series with UC-Irvine at 6:30 tonight at Tointon Family Stadium.

Freshmen multi-event athletes succeed far from home

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite starting college in a new country that was more than 4,500 miles from home, the Wildcats' freshman multi-event athletes, Rok Derzanic Moritz Cleve and Annika Schoenebeck, have had no shortage of success since leaving their homes in Europe to compete at K-State.

Derzanic, a native of Artice, Slovenia, finished eighth in the men's heptathlon at the NCAA Indoor Championships in March to earn All-America status. He recorded a personal best 5,645 points, ranking third on K-State's all-time list.

"I was satisfied with my place," Derzanic said. "I wasn't totally satisfied with my performance in some events, but I still got a personal best, so I think I should be satisfied with that."

At the Big 12 Conference Indoor Championships, Schoenebeck, a Bayern, Germany, native, placed eighth, tallying 3,603 points. At the Sevigne Husker Invitational in February, she totaled 3,731 points, the eighth-best effort in K-State women's history.

At the Big 12 Conference meet, the duo of Cleve and Derzanic claimed two-thirds of the medal stand in the heptathlon. Derzanic placed third, and Cleve took second, recording 5,655 points to take over second place in the K-State record book. Cleve, who comes from Bochum, Germany, took 12th at nationals, totaling 5,604 points.

"Before the Big 12 Championships, I didn't think I would be able to score the score that I actually did," Cleve said. "It was good. I just had a good competition, and I brought everything together and I didn't have a real bad event."

Coach Cliff Rovelto said he won't be surprised to see Cleve and Derzanic qualify for the NCAA Outdoor Championships in the decathlon as long as conditions are decent at the Big 12 Outdoor Championships May 16-18 in Boulder, Colo. The conference meet will be the only chance for the pair to compete in a full decathlon and qualify for regionals.

Both Cleve and Derzanic cited Rovelto as the reason they decided to move all the way to the middle of the United States to compete at K-State.

"I mainly decided because I read the biography of coach Rovelto, and it was pretty impressive," Cleve said. "Coach Rovelto coaches every single event, so we don't have special coaches for pole vault or throws."

While the transition to college life can be difficult for any freshman, especially one adjusting to a new country, Cleve and Derzanic said they've been able to lean on each other.

"We're dealing with same problems," Derzanic said. "We both have to know the new culture and everything here - there are a lot of differences here. It's always nice to have someone, a friend, competing with you. It makes breaks between events more interesting, more fun."

They also room together at competitions, practice together and schedule weightlifting sessions together. Cleve said the two support each other at meets and push each other in practice.

"Usually we take a little longer than everyone else because we do exactly what's on the practice schedule, and we don't try to skip things," he said. "I think that's why we did so good this year."

With more than three years left at K-State, both Cleve and Derzanic have high expectations for what they can accomplish.

Rovelto said he believes the duo can be among the best in the country during their careers at K-State.

"They're going to continue to get better," Rovelto said. "Who knows? Down the road they may be battling for a NCAA championship."

Go out and play on campus

OWEN KENNEDY

Since we were children, we've been forced to be conscious of our health and diet. Our parents encouraged us to drink our milk, eat our carrots and play outside, weather permitting. As we have become adults, that health consciousness has become a major part of our everyday lives. It is during times like this we should keep drinking our milk, eating our carrots and playing outside.

That time is spring. As we pack away our jeans, jackets and jean jackets and dust off our sandals and shorts, the opportunities for improving our health are becoming more easily accessible.

When the weather gets nicer, more people start to exercise and play sports outdoors. No more racquetball or treadmills, because April has finally allowed us to do one of the most "college" activities possible: playing sports on campus.

Frisbee and hacky sack are staples of the American college campus. While some might view playing catch or disc golf on campus as lame or pointless, these activities are great ways to enjoy the weather and the campus.

There also aren't a lot of substitute sports this time of year. K-State football doesn't start for another four months and by the time basketball starts, we will have elected a new president. And besides, the best sports are the ones that you can play, not just watch. If you have a couple hours between classes, why not grab a baseball and your glove and play catch with a friend?

Going to the Rec is a great way to stay in shape, but after a while you start to look out the windows by the treadmills. You notice the grass getting greener and you don't see as many people sprinting to the front doors to avoid the icy winds.

So wear some comfortable shoes, or no shoes at all, and kick the soccer ball or hacky sack around for a little bit. Take advantage of it now before the grass turns brown from the heat. Once the summer temperatures take over, feel free to seek refuge in the air-conditioned buildings on campus.

If you're not a sports fan, it is always entertaining to watch others throw a Frisbee around, especially when they lose it on a roof or in a tree. So exercise, have fun and have a laugh. It's spring, and it's time to release our inner hippie.

Tennis has 3 on Academic All-Big 12

K-State placed three student-athletes on the Academic All-Big 12 tennis first team in an announcement by the league office on Tuesday afternoon. This is the highest number of first-team recipients for the program since the 2003 season.

Wildcats named to the Academic All-Big 12 first team were: senior Viviana Yrureta (marketing), junior Katerina Kudlackova (psychology) and sophomore Natasha Vieira (business administration). This is the second straight honor for Yrureta and Kudlackova and the first career citation for Vieira.

In the history of the program, K-State has received 29 Academic All-Big 12 first team honors by 15 different student-athletes.

More starting to reject Facebook

By Clifford Watkins
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While some students could not imagine life without Facebook.com as a way to keep in touch with friends, plan events and spend hours looking at profiles, other students have made the choice to stay away from the social networking Web site.

Rebecca Smith, senior in applied music, said she has better things to do than log on to Facebook.

"It's just a waste of my time because I'm not benefiting from it," she said.

Smith also said she left the Web site for privacy reasons.

"There are too many nosy people that want to get in your business," she said.

Facebook was founded in February 2004 by Dustin Moskovitz and Chris Hughes. With the help of Mark Zuckerberg, the three students launched the site from their Harvard University dorm room.

By December of the same year, Facebook expanded from Harvard to Stanford, Columbia and Yale universities. At this time, the site had nearly one million active users.

Now Facebook boasts more than 70 million users, according to the site's fact sheet. Users' Facebook profiles often list hundreds of friends, but some people are skeptical about the reality of those friendships.

According to CNN, 26-year-old graduate student Gabe Henderson from Iowa State University said friends on Facebook are not 100 percent authentic.

"The superficial emptiness clouded the excitement I had once felt," Henderson told CNN.

"It seems we have lost, to some degree, that special depth that true friendship entails," he said, adding that he is in the process of eliminating his Facebook profile.

This skeptical view can be found with users at K-State as well.

"One drawback of Facebook is that it becomes a replacement for face-to-face communication," said Erika Blue, an intern with Counseling Services. "It's easier to stay in your room and be on Facebook than it is to actually communicate."

Blue said she does not think Facebook is all bad, though.

"It is positive in the sense that you can stay in touch with friends all over the country," she said. She added that she has seen a growing trend of more people continuing to use their Facebook profiles even after graduation.

Though Smith thought it was necessary for her to cancel her Facebook profile, she still had a message for millions of active members.

"Make sure you are focused on what you need to be focused on and not always on Facebook," she said.

Clinton claims victory in Pennsylvania

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA – Hillary Rodham Clinton won the Pennsylvania primary Tuesday night, defeating Barack Obama and staving off elimination in their riveting race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

CLINTON

The former first lady was winning 53 percent of the vote to 47 percent for her rival with 14 percent of the vote counted, and she hoped for significant inroads into Obama's overall lead in the competition for delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

Clinton scored her victory by winning the votes of blue-collar workers, women and white men in an election where the economy was the dominant concern. More than 80 percent of voters surveyed as they left their polling places said the nation was already in a recession.

Clinton won despite being outspent heavily by her rival in a six-week campaign that allowed time for intense courtship of the voters.

She showed her blue collar bona fides one night by knocking down a shot of whiskey, then taking a mug of beer as a chaser. Obama went bowling in his attempt to win over working-class voters.

The win gave Clinton a strong record in the big states as she attempts to persuade convention superdelegates to look past Obama's delegate advantage and his lead in the popular vote in picking a nominee. She had previously won primaries in Texas, California, Ohio and her home state of New York, while Obama won his home state of Illinois.

At the same time, even some of her aides conceded she is facing another likely must-win state in Indiana in two weeks time, particularly with Obama favored to carry North Carolina on the same day.

Clinton projected confidence to the end of the Pennsylvania campaign, scheduling an election-night rally in Philadelphia. Obama signaled in advance he expected to lose, flying off to Indiana for an evening appearance even before the polls closed.

Flush with cash, Obama reported spending $11.2 million on television in the state, more than any place else. That compared with $4.8 million for Clinton.

The tone of the campaign was increasingly personal – to the delight of Republicans and John McCain, the GOP presidential nominee-in-waiting gaining in the polls.

The remaining Democratic contests are primaries in North Carolina, Indiana, Oregon, Kentucky, West Virginia, Montana, South Dakota and Puerto Rico, and caucuses in Guam.

Obesity an issue among all

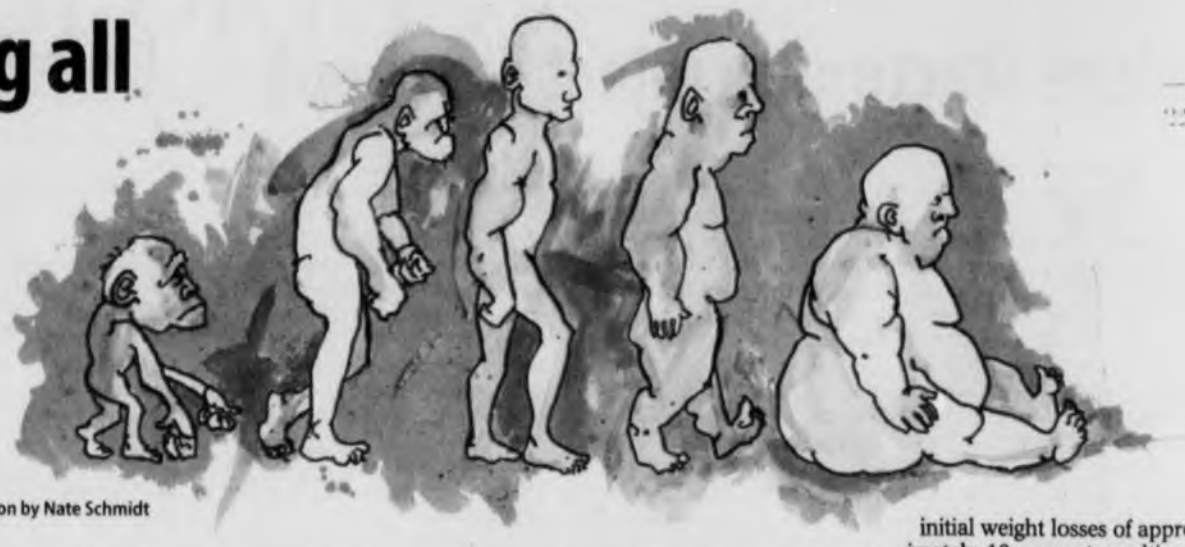

Illustration by Nate Schmidt

By Krystle Richard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Obesity is at a national, all-time high, and many are calling it an epidemic. According to the New England Journal of Medicine in 2007, the cases of obesity have increased substantially in the last 30 years, and 66 percent of adults are overweight.

Proposed explanations for the obesity epidemic include societal changes that promote inactivity, food consumption, genetics within socioeconomic groups and social networks, according to the NEJM.

Conclusions from a 2007 study revealed infectious causes of obesity are conceivable.

The study went on to state, "The observation that people are embedded in social networks suggests that both bad and good behaviors might spread over a range of social ties.

"Having obese contacts might change a person's tolerance for being obese and might influence their decision of adopting specific behaviors." Similar behaviors are noticed among those who smoke and drink.

OBESITY AND K-STATE

K-State's Housing and Dining Services aims to lead students in the direction of better food habits "by providing education and providing choices that fit within a healthy lifestyle," said Mark Edwards, unit director.

In the past 15 years, Edwards said he has noticed a change in weight proportions among students.

"I see a greater number in the extremes," he said. "I see those that are super fit, and I see those that are obese. There are fewer people in the middle."

While it is the goal to provide healthier eating habits, limiting the menu choices is not the answer, Edwards said.

"We should not eliminate food from our menus that we know are full flavor and higher in fat," he said. "We will make alternative choices included in our menu, such as fat-free, skim, low and light choices."

He said the responsibility lies in the hands of the individual to choose what is appropriate for them.

"We have so many choices out there that if someone wants to consume food that is light, they could," Edwards said.

On the Web site for K-State Housing and Dining, students are able to check the items on the day's menu for nutritional facts, ask a dietician a question or read dietary guidelines.

Health officials stressed that losing weight will not happen overnight. Lisa Ross, registered dietitian for the Riley County Heath Department, said there is no quick fix to losing weight.

"The more you eat the more you gain," she said. "A person needs to balance their intake with counter activity."

"Dieting alone is not enough," Edwards added. "You must curtail your intake of calories."

OBESITY PREVENTION

The responsibility of maintaining a healthy lifestyle is a collective effort; so many in the government have tried to regulate private behavior to promote healthier lives, according to a 2006 article in the NEJM.

Legislative initiatives were greatly considered in the past few years to improve nutrition and physical activity among children and adults. Much of the concern has been focused on local schools.

"The policies of school districts have been criticized for contributing to what researchers describe as a 'toxic environment' for children," the NEJM article stated.

Locally, the Manhattan Ogden School District 383 has tried to implement healthy snacks in school, Ross said. Parents are also encouraged to bring healthy snacks to school parties, and vending machines in high schools are being stocked with healthier food choices.

MAINTAINING ADULT WEIGHT-LOSS

A major challenge with treating obesity is keeping off the weight patients have already lost.

"Weight-loss programs involving diet, exercise and behavior modification produce initial weight losses of approximately 10 percent resulting in clinically important health benefits," according to the NEJM article.

However, the same journal showed that one-third of weight lost is regained during the next year. Those people were usually back at their initial weight within three to five years.

In Manhattan, a Staff Wellness program was approved for the Riley County Health Department's 45 employees. Many said they hope to gain useful information so they can implement a community-wide program someday, said Susanne Kufahl, assistant administrator for the RCHD.

"The intent of public health is to make the community healthier," Kufahl said.

research like this because when people are obese, they have all kinds of problems," Yang said. "Since they are not healthy, they have a higher chance to get cancer."

According to the Web site for the National Cancer Institute, obesity and physical inactivity can account for 25 to 30 percent of several major cancers – colon, breast (postmenopausal), endometrial, kidney and cancer of the esophagus.

However, Haub said he is not so sure about the link between weighing too much and developing cancer.

"I don't believe being overweight or obese causes much of anything," he said. "It is difficult to state that obesity, at least in humans, causes a disease without taking into account other factors, such as physical activity and diet. I wouldn't say obesity is a cause of cancer, but it is associated with it."

Haub conducted research on the effectiveness of exercise for weight management and weight loss.

"We found that exercise of reasonable intensity needs to be more than 30 minutes," he said. "Sixty minutes [of exercise] leads to significant differences from a lipid metabolism benefit."

Haub said the Midwest population in general and Manhattan residents in particular are more diet-conscious and fitness-conscious than people in other regions of the country.

"I think we are in pretty good shape," he said.

Haub said he recommended students establish habits of healthy living. like staying away from high-carb, high-fat and low-protein items like candy, chips and french fries, while regularly performing physical activity to stay healthy.

Makin' it look real

Above: Showing a different way to die, Benaiah Anderson, K-State alumnus and stage combat and fight director, works with Tybalt during his fight warm-up. Anderson worked with the cast of Romeo and Juliet on stage combat for two weeks in April as well as a week in March for tech rehearsals. Below: Anderson shows Romeo how to draw his sword after stabbing Tybalt. Anderson works out of Denver, Colorado and had his final rehearsal with the cast Tuesday night.

Graduate returns to help with play

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's theater department brought in some outside help to freshen up a production of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet".

Benaiah Anderson, professional fight director and K-State alumus, was asked by the theater department to work with the production cast.

Laura Lindsay, sophomore in theater and stage manager for the production, said Anderson will help make sure the fight scenes are preformed properly.

"[Anderson] is here to choreograph all the fights and make sure it's safe for the stage and audience," Lindsay said.

Anderson, who graduated from K-State in 2005, has been a fight director for his entire professional life and has worked on "Romeo and Juliet" before. However, he said "Macbeth" is his favorite production to work on because of the sword fighting involved.

"It's dark, it's violent, it's swordfights from beginning to end," Anderson said.

Anderson said another reason he likes "Macbeth" is its many different possible settings.

"I worked a show recently that was a Western 'Macbeth,'" Anderson said. "The final picture is Macbeth in one of those pine boxes. It was a fun show."

Anderson said his primary job is making sure the stage fights look real to those in the audience. He said the main difference between theater fights and movie fights is that the movies get help from computer-generated sound effects.

"You have to know how to make [stage fights] work," Anderson said. "In theater, part of the challenge is that you have to provide the noise live, unlike film where you have a [sound effects professional] sitting back with a computer and a sound effects room."

Because Anderson is self-employed, he doesn't always make enough money to pay his bills.

"I have some months when I end up owing my roommate half the rent," Anderson said. "Then the next month I might have three or four jobs. It really becomes an issue of self-marketing, you know, how well you put yourself out there."

Depending on how many fights there are to direct in the production, Anderson said he charges different amounts for his services. He typically charges $300-$400 for a high school show, but if there are a lot of fights, he will ask for more.

Fight choreography is not his only source of income. Some of the institutions that hire Anderson don't have their own weapons and in this situation, Anderson has a solution that benefits both parties.

"In a lot of the cases I'm able to bring some of my own swords," Anderson said. "You know, for an extra couple hundred bucks."

Anderson said he works closely with a man who makes swords as a living and rents his swords out to different theaters and operas to make money.

In addition to buying swords when he has enough money, Anderson is learning to make his own swords for theater fighting.

KING'S KITCHEN

Cook offers simple dessert recipe, another for chocolate truffles

BRETT KING

Every week it seems like I go through the same routine. Typically, I call my editor and tell her I don't know what I should do for a food column, and then we sit and figure it out through a process of questions. Week after week, I get the same answer – "Why don't you do a dessert column?"

There is only one tiny problem with doing a dessert column: My emphasis is not on pastries. To be quite honest, I only like dessert in small doses, and I have to be in the mood. In my opinion, one of the best desserts ever created is a jar of Nutella and a package of saltine crackers.

After complaining about doing a dessert column, I ran into a friend leaving the K-State Student Union. She proceeded to tell me my recipes were too difficult, so this week I have decided to feature two different recipes.

The first is called tiger butter and was developed by my aunt years ago. This dessert is one of the easiest desserts I have ever made. Second, for those a little more daring, I offer white chocolate truffles with toasted hazelnuts and dark chocolate.

TIGER BUTTER

Melt peanut butter and white almond bark together in a double broiler. If you do not have a double broiler, fill a small sauce pan with water, turn the stove on to medium to high heat and place a Pyrex glass bowl over the sauce pan.

The glass bowl is where you can melt the two ingredients.

Once melted, stir with whisk and pour into a 9-inch-by-13-inch cake pan and spread evenly. Melt the package of chocolate chips over the top of the peanut butter-bark mixture.

With a table knife, swirl the layer of chocolate and peanut butter bark together. Place in refrigerator until hard and then cut into individual pieces.

WHITE CHOCOLATE TRUFFLES WITH TOASTED HAZELNUTS AND CHOCOLATE

The highest quality chocolate is essential for this recipe, so don't skimp on price. Place the cream in a double broiler and cook until heated through. Using a whisk, slowly stir in the white chocolate chunks, a few at a time, into the warm cream until completely melted,, and next whisk in the vanilla and Bailey's.

Cover with plastic wrap and chill in refrigerator for 45 minutes to an hour. The chocolate will be ready when it is pliable but firm enough to scoop out.

With 15 minutes left for the chocolate to cool down, preheat oven to 350 degrees. With a 1 ¼ inch ice cream scoop, make dollops of the chocolate mixture and place on a baking sheet lined with parchment paper.

Place back in the refrigerator for 15 minutes or until hard enough to roll into balls. Take hazelnuts and chop them into small pieces. Put the chopped hazelnuts on a baking sheet and place in the oven for eight minutes. Allow hazelnuts to cool back down to room temperature.

Melt the dark chocolate in the double broiler. Drizzle the dark chocolate over the truffles. While the dark chocolate is setting, sprinkle hazelnut pieces over the top. Let the truffles chill in the refrigerator until ready to serve.

WHITE CHOCOLATE TRUFFLES

Ingredients:

—¼ cup heavy cream
—7 ounces white chocolate, chopped
—2 tablespoons Bailey's Irish Cream
—½ teaspoon pure vanilla extract
—½ cup hazelnuts, chopped
—6 ounces dark chocolate, chopped

TIGER BUTTER

Ingredients:

—1 jar of Jif Peanut Butter (18-20 oz)
—1 package of white almond bark (18-20 oz)
—1 large package of chocolate chips (12 oz)

MEL B BECOMES NEW FACE OF ULTIMO

Spice Girls star Mel B shows off her curves in a series of raunchy publicity shots for the underwear giant.

Mel said: "I am over the moon to become the face and body of Ultimo lingerie. After taking part in 'Dancing with the Stars' in the US and going on tour with the Spice Girls, I have never been in better shape, so I jumped at the chance to do this."

Ultimo's founder Michelle Mone added: "This is girl-power lingerie. I wanted the new face of my latest Ultimo collection to be someone strong, confident and outgoing and, most importantly, to have fire in her belly — and Mel certainly has all of the above."

The pictures, shot in a Los Angeles mansion, show Mel in an array of sexy items including white lace French knickers, a black strapless bra and underwear featuring her trademark leopard-print pattern.

HOFF IN HOSPITAL AFTER EYE INJURY

The former "Baywatch" actor was taken to Los Angeles' University of California Medical Center on Saturday to have something removed from his eye.

He was due to be released Monday. His publicist Judy Katz said: 'He's fine, he had something removed.' Although she refused to elaborate on what the foreign object was, she denied rumours he had checked into rehab.

HICKMAN | Faith, family help resident recover from husband's death

line in Manhattan.

"I'm just blessed that I've always had very good friends of all races," Hickman said. "I've never had a problem with getting along with anybody. I knew almost all of my classmates and had a lot of white and black friends. A lot of my black friends didn't want to go to the integrated school because they thought they'd be mistreated, but I just went over there, knew what to expect and made a lot of friends."

Hickman's friends said her cheerful disposition towards everyone she meets is continuously admired and appreciated.

"She's one of the dearest, kindest women I've ever met, and when I need to go to someone, she's always the person I can count on," said Patricia Patton, Hale Library archivist. "She's the type of person who remembers everyone's birthdays. She's a very gracious woman, and she's very much involved in her community."

Hickman is also extremely close to her family. Her mother died when Hickman was 9 after being sick for years, so she grew up living with her father and four younger brothers. Hickman has one living brother, who is 83, and she said they are exceptionally close. Along with her daughter, she has two granddaughters and five great-grandchildren.

In order to support her family, Hickman began working various jobs in Manhattan. She cooked for 13 years at fraternity and sorority houses, worked in the dietary department at Memorial Hospital, in the kitchen of the Riley County Senior Center and in the food court of the K-State Student Union before retiring when she was 68 years old. She said her favorite job was working as the cook for Delta Delta Delta sorority for more than three years.

"Those Delta girls were so good to me," she said. "I had a lot of fun working for the fraternity boys, too. I've always been employed at nice places with nice people. That's why I like Manhattan."

In order to bring in more income for their family, her husband owned and operated the Union Shoe Shine Parlor at 104 S. 4th St. for 22 years.

Hickman's most significant involvement with Manhattan now is staying active in her church. She attends Pilgrim Baptist Church, which is located at 831 Yuma St. and can be seen from her house. She has been attending the church her entire life, and was honored on March 30 as the oldest member.

She said she has become extremely close with the church's other members, and said she believes her life has been deeply blessed by God and her faith.

"I love my church family," she said. "They all know me and care about me. I love to go and hear the gospel singing, and I have a feeling that when I hear the preacher's words, I'm hearing God's word, which will help me live a happy and healthy life. I love the Lord, and God has blessed my life and family so much. The best way to give him thanks is to go to the services."

Hickman said she thinks God has given her life miracles and continuously helps her family. Her husband died in 1982 from a heart attack, and she said her faith and family helped her recover from the tragedy.

"My entire life changed a lot after he died," she said. "But my family has always seen that if I'm short in anything, they'll be there for me."

Hickman said she also enjoys going to the Manhattan Public Library, and would go every day when she had a car. She said all the library's workers knew her and treated her especially well. Since Hickman did religious readings at her church services, she would search for Christian readings and read various newspapers during her visits.

Hickman's friendliness and passion for Manhattan has made a positive impression on her community.

"I love Rosa Hickman," said Don Slater, Hickman's neighbor. Slater was also born and raised in Manhattan, and has lived on the same street as Hickman since his childhood. "She's one of the parents who always looked out for us children, plus she's the only parent that didn't whip me when I walked by. You wear yourself out trying to keep up with her every day - she's extremely active."

Many of her friends call her every day to chat and see how she is doing. She said she ends each conversation by saying, "I love you, God bless you!" before getting back to her other activities, pausing at times to wave to neighbors and people driving by.

When contemplating how to answer a question about how she's changed over her lifetime, she finally laughed heartily and gave a simple answer.

"I've always loved people, the Lord and my life, so I don't know if I've changed that much," she said. "I still have so many friends and I'm still invited to almost everything. God has blessed me with the happiest life, and I am so thankful."

Student aims to stir Darfur awareness

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The genocide in Darfur has been an ongoing crisis since 2003.

With the number of people who are dying every day, Philip LeBlanc, senior in print journalism, has decided to take it upon himself to create awareness of this crisis here at K-State, as well as in the Manhattan community.

LEBLANC

LeBlanc has worked for the last four months trying to urge the KSU Foundation to find investment opportunities. Because leaders of the foundation have said they are unable to invest, LeBlanc has decided to have a demonstration today in the K-State Student Union Courtyard to display his frustration.

The event will be from 12-2 p.m. and will require participation from those in attendance. LeBlanc said some people will carry signs stating facts about Darfur and others will lay down on the ground, representing those who have died during the genocide.

LeBlanc said he met with both the chief investment officer and director of investments at the KSU Foundation and was told they were unable to help because there was nothing in their mandate that required them to consider investing in political

DARFUR FACTS:

-5,000 people die each month because of the genocide in the region

-More than 400,000 Darfurians have already died from malnutrition, disease, or violence from the government

- 2.5 million have been displaced from their homes because of the violence

- 4 million are now reliant on humanitarian aid

- President Bush and the U.N. have already deemed it the 21st century's first genocide

3 local missing girls found to be runaways

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three girls reported missing on Saturday are believed to be runaways, according to a Riley County Police Department alert bulletin.

The girls, Jessika Hodges, 15; Robin Calhoon, 16; and Maia Manning, 14, still have not returned to their foster home after leaving for the carnival at the K-State Spring Game, according to the bulletin.

RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup said the girls are believed to be together and in either Manhattan, Lawrence or Chanute, Kan.

Moldrup said the three girls might have left in a white sudan, possibly a Ford, with an unknown driver.

He said all the girls have a history of running away.

Activist sheds light on American Indian struggles, issues

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many students are aware of the U.S. Civil Rights Movement and the Women's Movement, however, the stories of the American Indian Movement during the early 1970s are often overlooked or not explored.

In light of Native American Heritage Month in April, Arthur Short Bull, a member of the Oglala Lakota tribe from the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota, conducted a presentation "Red Road, Black Road: Reflections on Life on Pine Ridge in the 1970s" Monday night in the K-State Student Union.

The activist gave first-person accounts of the struggles and social problems of American Indians living on reservations.

The Pine Ridge Indian Reservation is known for its protest movements and several years of violent incidents.

The speaker shared painful memories from his past.

"During '60s, if an Indian boy got in a fight with white boy, the police would arrest Indian, even if a white boy attacked first," Short Bull said. "We had no voice."

The speaker said when he was a young man, he got arrested and sent to jail for no reason, "just for being an Indian," he said.

Getting a college education during the 1960s and '70s was an unattainable dream for many American Indians, he said.

During that time, authorities banned all kinds of meetings inside the reservation, including dances and funeral dinners.

"Part of our culture was destroyed," he said.

Short Bull said for past and present activist movements, most of the activists showed up only if a there was attention from the media.

"I couldn't trust them," he said. "They were doing it not for us, not for the future of our children, but for appearing in the news."

Short Bull drew the audience's attention to the personality of Anna Mae Aquash, who was one of the most famous female members of the American Indian Movement during the early 1970s.

"Her life and her death represent what activism is really about," Short Bull said.

She was murdered in 1975, and the alleged motives for the crime were the mistaken belief that Aquash was a government informant and that she also knew who killed FBI agents, he said.

According to Lakota beliefs, there are two roads in life - red and black.

"Red road is a dedication to God, it will take you to heaven. Black road is a parallel path of your daily things and choices you make every minute," Short Bull said. "Anna Mae Aquash was the best of us, she chose the red road."

The speaker also discussed the need for more professionals who can teach American Indian languages.

"A lot of Native Americans truly want to speak their language, to learn culture and practice rituals," Short Bull said.

Lisa Tatonetti, assistant professor of English and American ethnic studies, attended the lecture and said the 1970s were an important and under-discussed period in American history.

"That's why I'm really excited to attend this talk," she said.

John Diederich, sophomore in open option, found the time of the event convenient and the theme appealing.

"I'm interested in this topic because it is a part of our culture," he said.

WAR IN IRAQ

Mixed signals

Illustration by Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Many people are critical about media coverage of the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, including soldiers, but two journalists at K-State said showing what goes wrong is just a part of the journalism profession.

Soldier, journalists give views on Iraq

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Flip to any major news station or Web site today, and it is almost guaranteed there will be at least one article, story or update about the war in Iraq.

However, this news is rarely positive, and many who were or still are involved with the war, like K-State student and 2006 Army veteran Sgt. Lupe, are tired of the nation only getting details of death and destruction overseas.

Lupe asked that his full name not be used in this story.

"The media just seems to report a lot of bad stuff that's going on over there," Lupe said. "There is a lot of bad stuff going on, but there is a lot of good stuff too. The bad stuff – I think it just grabs people's attention more so than the good stuff that's going on."

But Fred Brock, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications and New York Times freelance writer, offered insight.

"Can you imagine if a newspaper in the country reported on all the planes that landed safely in the U.S.?" he said. "No one would read that. It's the plane that crashes that makes the news."

Brock said no matter what, war is a negative activity; it's a sign diplomacy has failed, and he said it's hard to put a positive spin on that.

But even so, Lupe said he believes the media portrays the war in a more negative light than it should be.

"It's upsetting," he said, "but I try not to spend too much time watching it."

An example of this, he said, is the issue of stop-loss – soldiers being reinstated at the end of their contracts.

News stories and films like the MTV movie, "Stop-Loss," have led viewers to believe soldiers are desperately wanting to get out of the Army, but are continually being stop-lossed to make up for a lack of enrollment. Though soldiers, including Lupe, have been stop-lossed, he said the media still are exaggerating its effects on the Army and the soldiers.

"I've been stop-lossed a couple times, but it happens," he said. "The Army's been rolling along since this country was brought up. When there's soldiers that keep getting out, there's going to be soldiers that keep coming in, so I don't think [the Army or its soldiers are] hurting in any way."

Lupe, junior in biology, said he had no specific reason to join the Army, he "just knew" he would while growing up in Washington state. In 1996, at the age of 25, he enlisted.

Lupe said he remembered being on duty when the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks occurred.

"I was getting ready to get off duty," he said, "then everybody started running and started talking about planes crashing into the World Trade Center, and then a few hours after that, we got the orders to get ready, pack all our bags and take off."

Shortly after, Lupe was sent to Kuwait and later Iraq, where he served as a combat engineer, primarily working as an improvised explosive device hunter.

Though he said most of his time in Iraq was spent finding IED's and caches before they could hurt other coalition soldiers, Lupe said he and his brigade also worked on projects to improve the cities and communities where they were stationed.

"We also helped build bridges, improve roads, provided a lot of jobs and rebuilt schools," he said. "One of my buddies that died over there, before he died, had told his mom that he wanted her to send school supplies. So we got to do that after he died – his mom had already sent it – and we'd go to local schools and give pens and paper to local kids and stuff like that. You know, that wasn't everyday stuff that we did, but we did a lot of that."

Lupe said television news and the Internet are the two media sources he thinks neglect the war's positive influence the most.

However Stacy Neumann, journalism and mass communications instructor and former news anchor, said the tone of the media's coverage depends on what level the news is reporting from.

"The national media's job is to talk more about national policy, whether or not things are working and to sort of look at those larger issues," she said. "So by that very nature, it's going to take a critical eye.

"But local coverage, if you're going to look at the Manhattan Mercury or our local NBC affiliate in Topeka, their coverage talks about smaller issues and how our local soldiers are interacting, how they're doing and how they're living. People tend to perceive that as a little more positive."

Neumann covered local militaries while working out of North Carolina and Alabama as well as working as an embedded journalist in Afghanistan before the war in Iraq.

She said many people think

JELL-O SNACK PACKS SPLATTER OVER FLORIDA HIGHWAY

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. – A driver is being treated at a Saint Johns County hospital after his truck overturned, spilling Jell-O snack packs all over I-95.

Police say the driver's truck flipped over this morning after it slammed into another truck. Individual packs of Jell-O splattered all over the highway, which caused a major traffic jam.

The driver was trapped inside the mangled truck, but was quickly rescued by police. He was airlifted to the hospital and is being treated for non-life-threatening injuries.

DISNEY RECOVERS RINGS MISTAKENLY THROWN AWAY

ORLANDO, Fla. – While tidying up their villa as they prepared to leave the park late last week, Paul Campanale dumped a cardboard bowl, not knowing the container inside it held his wife Karen's engagement, wedding and five-year-anniversary rings.

Back at the Wilderness Lodge resort, executive housekeeper Drew Weaver realized that trash from the Campanales' villa hadn't reached the industrial-size compactor yet.

He and seven other volunteers donned protective clothing, emptied a parking lot bin and waded through bag after bag of rubbish to find the rings. And they did.

WOMAN CLAIMS VICTORIA SECRET STOLE HER BRA

NEW YORK – A New York woman filed suit against Limited Brands Inc. on Monday alleging the parent company of Victoria's Secret stole her idea for its Very Sexy 100-way strapless convertible bra.

Katerina Plew sued in U.S. District Court in lower Manhattan, saying Victoria's Secret infringed her May 2004 patent and knew about the patent since at least April 2006.

"I came up with the idea when I was trying to find a bra to go with one of the two dresses that I could wear to my triplets' christening," said Plew, 38. "I went crazy looking for a bra where the straps wouldn't show and couldn't find anything."

Her triplets are now nine years old. Plew, a single mother who works as a paralegal, said she researched her product visiting stores and looking through catalogues, and "that's when I came up with the idea."

HELLO KITTY RECEIVES HIGH FASHION MAKEOVER, SHOPS

TOKYO – She may be cute, but the latest top model to make her debut in Vogue is also podgy with short legs and whiskers.

Hello Kitty, a popular cat character in Japan, is set for a designer makeover in the June issue of Japanese Vogue, which goes on sale on April 26. The fashion spread will show Kitty modeling the latest autumn and winter designs by John Galliano for the Dior brand, posing with the designer and enjoying a shopping spree in Paris.

23 DUIs issued last weekend

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department made 23 arrests for driving under the influence over the weekend, according to RCPD reports.

The arrests were not part of a DUI checkpoint, RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup said, but were probably because of an increase in traffic in Manhattan.

"The Spring Game brought a lot of people in to town; Open House brought a lot of people in to town," Moldrup said. "There were a lot more people on the road."

Moldrup said it is probable the warmer weather also played a factor.

Student to host 3rd-annual bone marrow drive Friday

By Tierra Gordon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Rachael Leisy, junior in family and human services, decided to start a bone marrow drive to help others in need of a transplant after she was diagnosed with Muscular Dystrophy Syndrome on Aug. 9, 2006. She received a donor Oct. 6, 2006.

"It's a way of giving back to people who need it," Leisy said.

On Friday, Leisy will hold her third annual Bone Marrow Registry Drive in the K-State Student Union, which will consist of mouth swabbing and health screening to determine donor eligibility.

Her previous drives have been successful, she said.

Eighty-nine people attended the first drive and 106 attended the second. Leisy has set a goal of having 150 people sign up on Friday.

This year's drive is also Leisy's first that she has put together on her own, though she received help from others.

Natalie Deutsch, senior in apparel marketing, who has also had a transplant for her diagnosis of Acute Myelogenous Leukemia, said she wanted to help Leisy to give back to those who have helped her.

Deutsch has helped Leisy publicize the drive by chalking on campus, and she will serve as a volunteer at the drive.

Natalie Knight, junior in elementary education, said she plans to help because she wants to inform students about the bone marrow registry.

Tthough her previous drives have been successful, Leisy said she is aware of students who have different views about becoming a donor and getting on the registry.

"They think about the misconceptions, but it is not as bad as it used to be, such as donating from the hip," she said. "Technology has changed and now it's simple, it's just giving blood."

According to the Web site for the National Bone Marrow Registry, adult donors may be asked to donate in one of two ways: "A surgical procedure done under general or regional anesthesia so the donor experiences no pain during the collection process, or peripheral blood cell donation [that] involves removing a donor's blood through a sterile needle in one arm. The blood is passed through a machine that separates out the cells used in transplants. The remaining blood is returned through the other arm."

Curtis Weathersby, sophomore in open option, swabs his mouth for a DNA match for possible marrow recipients at the blood marrow drive in the K-State Student Union on March 2.

"I think it's that they think they have to pay, and they are uninformed about it," Knight said.

Having these drives have now become a passion for Leisy.

She said her dream is to

SGA to appoint committee chairs, special committee members

By Michael Champlin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate will vote on the appointment of chairs for the senate's eight standing committees. These appointments include:

-Piper Hoskins, junior in economics, allocations committee chair

-Jessica Schultz, junior in political science, college council allocations committee chair

-Dalton Henry, junior in agricultural economics, governmental relations committee chair

-Gerald Wayne Stoskopf, junior in agricultural business, privilege fee committee chair

-Andrew Huschka, junior in industrial engineering, university relations committee chair

The Senate will also approve Matt Spade, freshman in biological and agricultural engineering, to the position of Student Senate parliamentarian and William Lopez, senior in finance, to serve as Student Senate secretary. A total of 17 senators applied for the eight positions, and these appointees were chosen based on their leadership ability, experience and dedication to serving K-State students throughout the next Senate term, according to the agenda.

Tonight Student Senate will vote on the appointment of Emily Haug, junior in political science, to chair the Special Committee on Big 12 Student Government Affairs.

The special committee will be responsible for planning and organizing the 2008 Big 12 Student Government Leadership Conference and the 2008 Big 12 Day on the Hill. The leadership conference takes place at K-State in fall 2008 and includes representatives from every Big 12 school.

Senate will also introduce legislation to create a special committee to review expansion plans for the Peters Recreation Complex. The proposed committee will meet during the summer with architects and provide student feedback during the design phase of the expansion project. Student Senate Chair Amy Schultz, junior in biology, and Student Body President Lydia Peele, senior in mathematics education, will serve as co-chairs of the committee, and at least seven student senators will serve.

Senate will also appoint Kristen Tremonti, freshman in family and consumer education, to fill a vacancy in the College of Human Ecology. Tremonti received the next highest vote total in the Student Government Association elections that took place in March.

Facebook failures

Social networking site admits need for security improvements

JESSICA HENSLEY

I love Facebook.com.

I waste time on Facebook like it's my job. It's the best way I know to keep track of all of the people in my life. However, Facebook has had its fair share of problems that founder Mark Zuckerberg finally admitted to last month in an interview with BusinessWeek columnist Sarah Lacy.

Zuckerberg has said on numerous occasions that the goal of the Web site has always been to create "an environment where people could share whatever information they wanted but also have control over whom they shared that information with."

In the past, Facebook has prospered because it created a comfortable environment, in which users could feel safe sharing information. If a privacy issue ever arose, it was always a simple matter of changing the setting.

Yet as Facebook continued to expand and develop new features, the privacy of its users ceased to be a priority. This was made only too clear last fall with the introduction of the Facebook Beacon service, which notified users' friends – without the users' consent – about online purchases made at subscription Web sites.

In the interview with Lacy, Zuckerberg said about Beacon, "We probably got a little bit ahead of ourselves. We came across as knowing more than we really knew."

He went on to say that the episode with Beacon taught him an important lesson.

"Almost all of the mistakes we made, we didn't give people enough control," Zuckerberg said.

It's no secret why Web sites like Facebook and MySpace.com distribute information. They are looking for more ways to turn a bigger profit. Users' privacy, which used to be a priority, is being replaced by Web sites' desire to make more money.

According to comScore Media Metrix, Facebook generates more than $150 million in annual revenue and is estimated to have a total net worth of $15 billion. And this value continues to increase as Facebook continues to sell access to users' information to marketing companies.

What Facebook and social sites need to do – and what the law should require them to do – is give users as much control over their online identity as they have over their identity offline. Users should have the ability to grant their consent for information to be distributed, and they should have a say over what is viewable and by whom. These applications should require users to opt-in rather than allowing them to opt-out.

Thankfully, it seems as if Facebook finally is heading back in the right direction. Recent changes to the site's privacy and security policies have indicated a genuine interest on Zuckerberg's part in rebuilding a sense of trust with Facebook users.

A step in the right direction, to be sure. We can only hope that in a world where user privacy has, for the most part, fallen by the wayside, Web sites like Facebook continue to listen and respond to the concerns of their users.

Feeding all supersedes biofuel, ethanol needs

MARK WAMPLER

The past several weeks have offered a confusing juxtaposition between people wanting to create new types of efficient fuel and people who simply want to eat. There have been riots in more than 12 countries over increasing food prices, as the New York Times reported. Haitian prime minister Jacques-Edouard Alexis has been dismissed as a result of the unrest and many people have been killed. This is a serious problem that won't go away soon.

The World Bank reports that food prices have risen 83 percent in developing countries over the past three years. Wheat prices have risen by 130 percent since March of last year, and 60-80 percent of overall income is now spent on food, according to the United Nations.

The Economist reported the food prices are likely to remain high for years as developing countries improve conditions and demand more commodities, crops continue to be put into biofuel and droughts continue to plague Australia's rice crop and other food-growing regions.

U.N. officials met April 15 to discuss "concerns about the proper balance between saving the environment and feeding the poor." The United States has been criticized for plunging into ethanol production, which raises corn prices.

The European Union recently rejected an appeal by an advisory council to do away with its goal of producing 10 percent biofuel of total oil output by 2020, but it has been rethinking its emphasis on the use of biofuels.

Though not the main cause of rising food prices, biofuel – especially ethanol – has played an increasing part in globally rising food prices as commodities that were once eaten are now burned for fuel.

President Bush has allocated $200 million in emergency food aid, and the World Bank plans next year to double its food aid to Africa next year, which is more than $400 million. However, some experts think food aid should not be the main priority of the developed world, rather "the root challenge is to improve low productivity of 1.5 billion small farmers in the developing world," said Christopher Barrett, professor of agriculture at Cornell University.

He urged that aid agencies not lose sight of the bigger picture amid the present food-price frenzy. He also said Third-World farmers consume more than they can produce.

This is a problem that will not be reconciled easily. Biofuel advocates will have to rethink the benefits of alternative fuel in comparison with food inflation. As a result, environmental aims might need to give way to the needs of the poor and as the U.N. council reports, agricultural methods will have to change.

"Providing enough food for the poor, while taking care of health needs and the environment means reconciling contradictory objectives," said Guilhem Calvo, consultant to the report.

Salvatore Arico, biodiversity specialist on the U.N. council, also highlighted the quandary saying, "Modern agriculture will have to change radically if the international community wants to cope with growing populations and climate change."

The food crisis reaffirms the ethanol scam, which is neither a cheap nor efficient means of alternative fuel. Ethanol must be abandoned, and ironically, an alternative made for this alternative fuel. Filling bellies must come before environmentally efficient fuel sources. It would be interesting to talk to K-State agricultural majors about the changes needed in farming methods to meet the challenge of the growing food problem and the heightened environmental awareness of earth sustainment.

TO THE POINT

Do more for the world

The Internet, 24-hour news stations and mobile media devices have made information easier to access than any other time in history. In a matter of seconds, we can learn or research almost anything, easily.

But there is some information we choose not to look for and it is information that could save lives.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Since early 2003, the Darfur region of Sudan has suffered the horrors of war and mass murder. According to the U.S. State Department, an estimated 400,000 men, women and children have been killed since the conflict began – and that number is from 2005.

It is easy for students to join Facebook groups calling for more humanitarian action, but this does little to nothing. Politicians can pass as many nonbinding resolutions as they want, but these actions don't stop the killing.

We have the tools and the influence to stop the atrocities in Africa – not just in Sudan – but we have chosen not worry about it. The rapes, wars and genocides in Africa have become issues with which we as a world are comfortable. This is the real inconvenient truth.

K-State, its students, other colleges and other students should not take "no" for an answer when we demand that our leaders do more to stop a genocide when we are able to do so. The least we can do is donate to the efforts to send more humanitarian aid to our fellow human beings. Just because they live in a different continent, does not make them insignificant. Period.

Let's do more – all of us. We can stop this atrocity, if we have the will and the desire.

To the hot girl in the yellow shorts playing sand volleyball at Manhattan Christian College: Would you please come across the street and talk to me? I'll be in the back of my truck.

To the old guy singing his heart out with his car window down: Thank you for making my day worth getting up for.

To the girl who almost hit me: You suck at driving.

I just saw some girl on campus sporting KU gear, and she was loud and obnoxious. Go figure.

I'm walking the long way because it's shadier.

If you see someone you don't know on campus and they smile at you, smile back. It's not creepy — it's courteous.

Hey, everybody at the Derb: Stop eating so many hot dogs. Like, now. Thank you.

To the guy in the yellow shirt that I just saw running in front of Moore: You make me giggle really bad.

Hey, girl driving a black convertible sucking on a cancer stick: Don't get mad at me for knowing how to pull into the nearest lane.

It has to be damaging to Lindsay Lohan's self esteem to always be pictured in the newspapers as drunk and alone.

My day would be so much better if the disc golfers could keep their clothes on.

To the boy who couldn't fit in the space in the parking lot: We think all boys should look like you.

To the girl who tried to catch the Frisbee and wiped out: Wow.

To all the incredibly hot guys at the Rec: Where are you on the weekends?

Gallery shows art by female Kansans

The walls of the Strecker-Nelson Art Gallery are lined with scenes of tranquil Kansas horizons and winding streams, all of which female Kansas artists created.

Twenty-six artists have their work on display for the "Women of the Flint Hills" exhibit. Barbara Nelson, gallery co-owner, said each artist submitted at least three pieces, but many of them have more on display.

The pieces in the exhibit will be for sale until May 31.

Nelson said some of her favorite works were by Chris Wolf Edmonds, who specializes in quilt work, but she said she likes all artwork in the gallery.

She said the average price for a piece of art would be about $600, with artwork ranging from $200 to $5,000. Ceramic pieces are popular for graduation gifts and for people who don't have as much money to spend, because they are usually cheaper.

"Whether they're working in a realist or impressionist approach, in fiber or ceramic, even the abstractions represent the Kansas landscape," said Samuel Nelson, art handler, framer and son of co-owner Jay Nelson.

Samuel Nelson said the exhibit earned its name after it was already planned.

"A lot of our clientele really love this group of artwork, so we thought, 'Why not go ahead and put them all together in a show?'" Nelson said. "We looked at the roster of artists in the gallery and realized a great number of the artistry in landscape and our more popular artists in landscape were women."

Julie Strecker opened the Strecker-Nelson Art Gallery in 1979, and it was acquired by Jay Nelson in 2000, Samuel said. Now, it is a family business in which the artists and the Nelsons split the profits 50-50.

Samuel said Jay started out as an artist and found himself meeting some of the most well-known artists in Kansas, but he was not having much luck selling his own art. Instead, he made a career move and decided to become a dealer and maintain his contacts to help those people sell their art.

"The Dilemma," a paper mache sculpture by Sylvia Beeman, is one of Beeman's many sculptures on display in the Strecker-Nelson Art Gallery for the Women of the Flint Hills exhibit.

Manhattan Public Library helps residents 'go green'

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three speakers offered ways to save money on energy bills last night at the Manhattan Public Library.

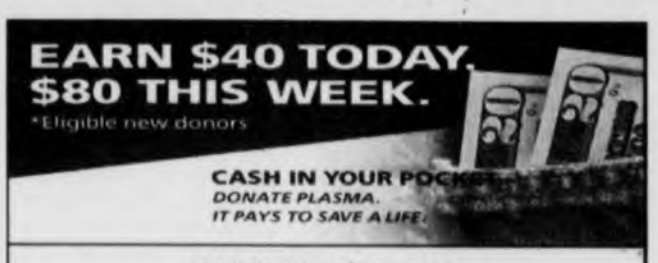
Christine Reimler spoke about a low-interest loan program called the Kansas Energy Efficiency Program, which is supposed to promote energy-efficiency improvements to homes. KEEP was created by the Kansas Housing Resources Corporation.

The program was started in November, Reimler, homeownership manager at KHRC, said. The program helped 52 home owners improve their homes, but that number has recently increased after KEEP removed the income requirements for the loans.

Gina Penzig, manager of consumer services at Westar Energy, also offered advice to attendees about being responsible with home appliances. She said opening a refrigerator 30 times per day uses the same amount of energy as leaving a plasma television on for an hour.

Penzig said Westar Energy hired a new CEO, Bill Moore, who helped progress Westar's own energy efficiency program, in July 2007.

She said the energy capacity in demand by consumers is outgrowing the supply Westar can provide. By 2016, the amount of energy needed will increase from 5,000 megawatts to 6,000 megawatts. Wind, solar power and natural gas will make up for the needs coal and nuclear energy can't meet.

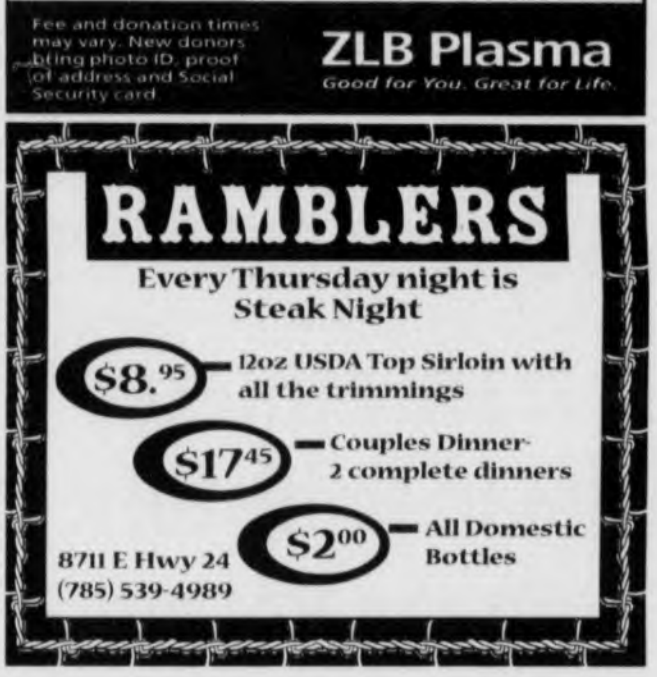


The last guest to present was Jennifer Wilson, county extension director for Riley County K-State Research and Extension. She gave lists of advice to help community members save money on their energy bills, like turning off the television when it's not in use and making sure lights are off when leaving a room.

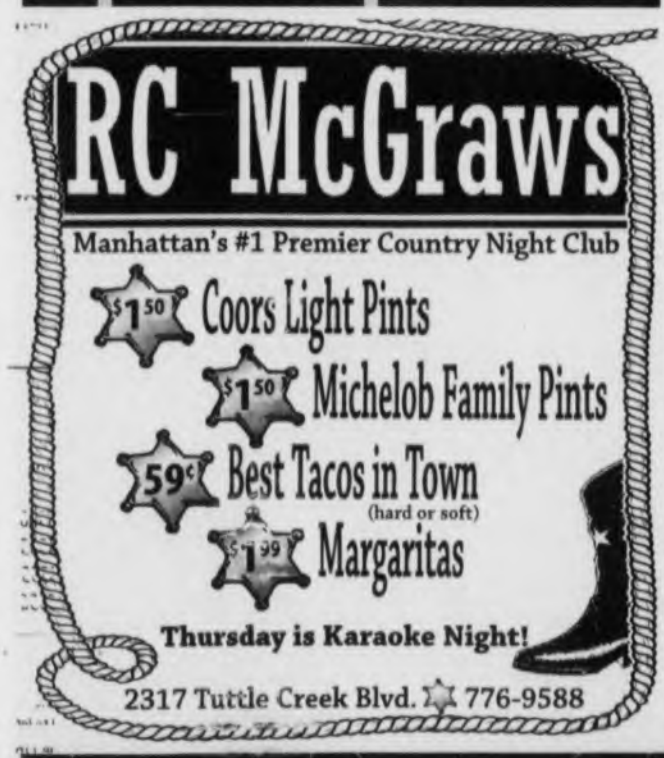
She said not being energy efficient affects everyone.

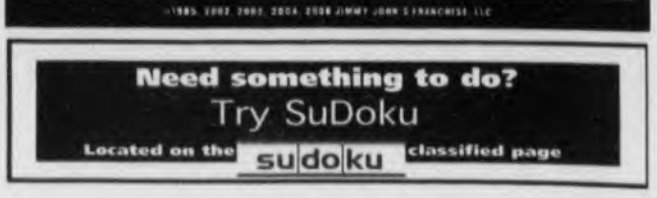
"Eventually, it's going to hit us all in the pocketbook," she said.

Rhonna Hargett, reference librarian at MPL, said the event was part of "Energy Awareness Week," which was inspired by the recent trend of turning environmentally friendly.



"It seemed like we really needed to get some information out there," she said.





Spring Game reveals exactly what it should

MIKE DEVADER

I noticed something while I was sitting in the stands at the Spring Game on Saturday.

A lot of the fans don't realize that the game isn't meant to be flashy nor have a combined 80 points put up on the board. All the game was last weekend was a glorified, faster practice that marked the end of spring drills.

That's the way it has always been.

Now, some universities hype the spring game more, meaning the games must consist of more than the average fundamental running plays. For example, the Nebraska Cornhuskers had more than 80,000 fans attend their game in Lincoln, Neb., but get real: The main reason they probably have that many people is the fans look forward to this game the whole year because there is nothing else to do up there.

Or it could be because of the excitement surrounding the hiring of head coach Bo Pelini. He was rehired by the Huskers after he spent time as the defensive coordinator for 2007 national champions LSU Tigers. Nebraska fans think once again they have found the savior coach who will resurrect their program up to the liking of Tom Osborne.

Well, they thought that of Bill Callahan too.

Nebraska had excitement brewing under the anticipation of a new era. K-State's game had that same feel to it when Ron Prince had his first game. Around 40,000 Wildcat fans filled Snyder Family Stadium to get a taste of K-State's new era, and they mostly came away pleased.

On Saturday, though, I heard much grumblings about how we are going to be horrible this coming fall. Do those people not realize the game isn't about what the team is going to look like this fall?

It's about the team and the organization wanting the crowd to get their little taste of football before the end of the school year. Fans should come into this game knowing that the game isn't going to be filled with reverses, Hail Mary's or huge hits. If you think that's the way it should be, you need to wake up and smell the coffee.

Besides, many of the players who will be contributing this fall aren't even with the team because of high school graduation or academic issues.

With that in mind, the game is also a great chance for the fans and coaching staff alike to get a look at players that might only have one chance to show what they can do on the football field.

The real fans realize the Spring Game isn't for anything other than repetition of fundamentals and just getting a game-type situation under the players' belts. The fans that make assumptions for the season just based on what they saw on Saturday are nuts.

If you're going to make judgments at all, wait until K-State gets a fair review by having their whole team participate.

Track athletes head to historic Drake Relays

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the third time in a month, the track and field team is competing at one of the most prestigious meets in the country.

The Wildcats will be in action today through Saturday at the 99th-annual Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa. In recent weeks, the Wildcats have sent athletes to the celebrated Texas Relays and Kansas Relays.

Head track and field coach Cliff Rovelto said these three meets have been staples of track and field in the Midwest for many years and draw talented athletes and big crowds.

"For a long time those were the meets that everyone wanted to go to," Rovelto said. "So you've got that history and tradition, but also it's a show. It's the biggest thing going on in Des Moines during the course of the year."

Junior sprinter Mike Myer, who ran at the Kansas Relays last weekend, said competing in top meets in consecutive weeks provides good preparation for later in the season.

"It's nice because it kind of gets you ready for the Big 12 Conference meet and the Midwest Regional meet because those obviously are going to be back-to-back at the very end of the season," Myer said. "I think it just gets your body in shape for performing at the highest level every weekend."

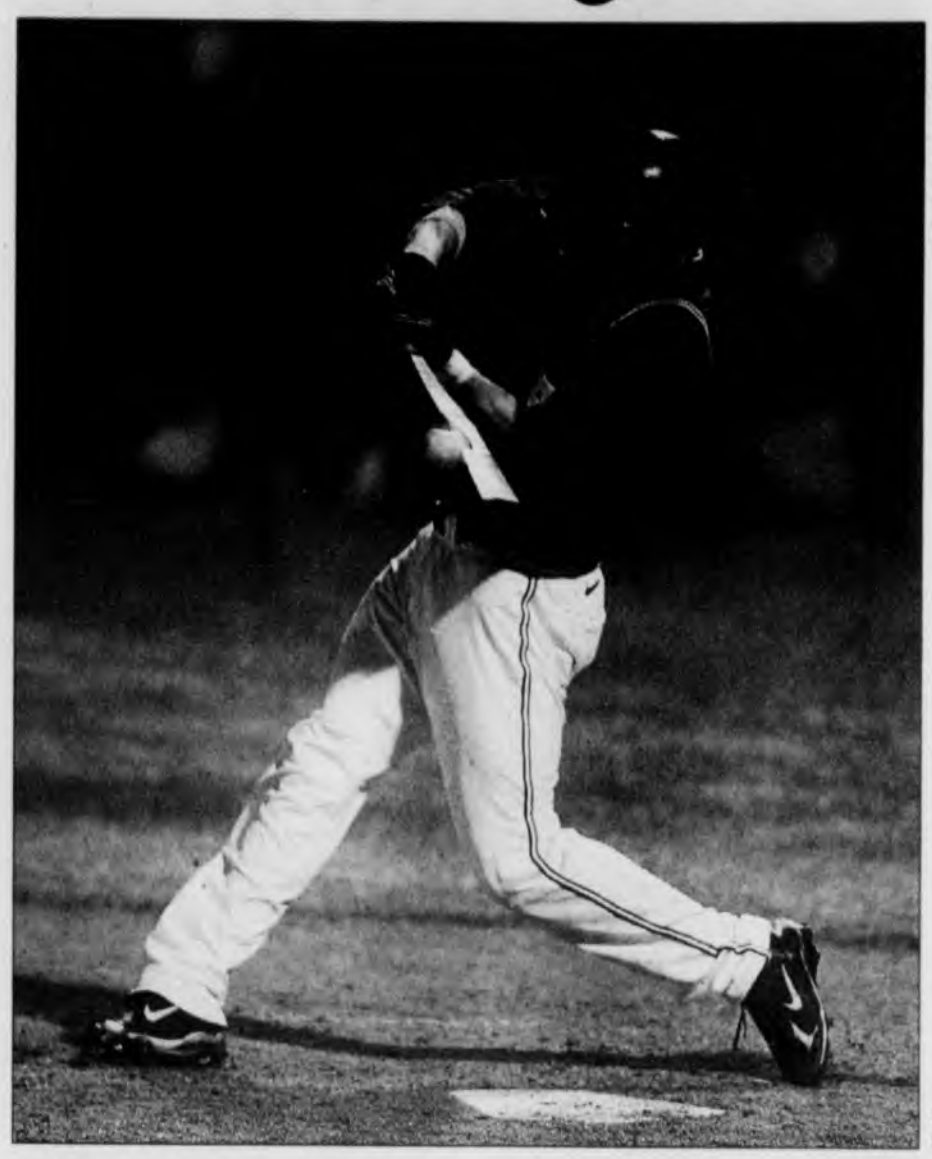
A limited number of athletes are accepted to compete in each event at the relays, which leaves the field with only the top athletes. Running against the best competition, Myer said, is also good practice for the conference meet, which begins on May 16, in Boulder, Colo.

"It helps you run better," Myer said of the competitive field at the relays. "It gives you experience. Whenever you're running in the big meets, you need as much experience as you can get."

Senior sprinter Donniece Parrish, who has competed at the Drake Relays four times, including her freshman year when she attended Southeast Missouri State, said the nearly century-old events always has a great atmosphere.

"It's a lot of people; the crowd is crazy," Parrish said. "There are a lot of people there to support. There's a lot of good competition. It's a great place to be to put up good times and good numbers."

Parrish, who won the women's 100-meter dash at the relays last year, will be running the 400-meter leg of the women's distance medley relay and the 4x400-meter relay. She said she expects to perform well again this year.



"I know we're going to go to Drake and handle business like we've always done," Parrish said. "Running with the girls, I'm expecting to put up good times again."

Most of the Wildcats won't be competing at Drake this weekend, as many have the weekend off and a handful are competing at the Nebraska Open on Sunday, in Lincoln. Rovelto said a select few Wildcats might compete in both events over the weekend.

Rovelto said, the athletes are in good enough shape this year to compete twice in a weekend and can benefit from the extra competition.

Bloxom hits 2-run shot in 11th for win

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though the Wildcats blasted No. 11 UC-Irvine to score five runs in the first inning, the Anteaters managed to fight their way back to threaten K-State's chance at an upset Wednesday at Tointon Family Stadium.

The Wildcats got the last word in the game though, as Justin Bloxom hit a walk-off, two-run home run to end the game in the 11th inning to capture a 9-7 win for the Wildcats. Bloxom finished the game 2-for-6 with the home run, a double and four RBIs.

"That's what you play for," Bloxom said. "[I was thinking] put some pop on it, put it in play and see what happens. I was just trying to hit the ball. I wasn't trying to do anything."

The game almost didn't have the chance to end in that dramatic fashion. Nate Tenbrink drew a two-out walk but was nearly caught stealing when he fell down off first trying to get a jump to second.

"I was surprised we were lucky," said K-State coach Brad Hill. "We caught a break and we got very fortunate right there."

K-State (19-21) got to Irvine (25-10) pitcher Daniel Bibona early after he hit Jordan Cruz to open the game and then moved Cruz to second with a balk. Adam Muenster singled to put runners at first and third and then stole second base to put pressure on Bibona.

The pitcher responded to the pressure by hitting Tenbrink with a pitch and loading the bases. Bloxom opened the Wildcat scoring with a two-run double to give K-State a 2-0 lead. Carter Jurica and Jason King hit back-to-back RBI singles to give the Wildcats a 4-0 lead and force Bibona to exit before recording a single out.

Kyle Necke took over on the mound for the Anteaters and halted the Wildcats scoring run, but not before a sacrifice fly from Brett Scott scored the final run of the inning and gave K-State a 5-0 advantage.

Irvine responded in the second with a RBI single by Josh Tavelli to score Dillon Bell from third base. Run-scoring singles from Ollie Linton and Jeff Cusick in the third inning cut the K-State lead to 5-3.

K-State added an extra run in the fourth inning when Muenster singled to score Scott from third base and give the Wildcats a three-

Cats have chance to avenge loss to Huskers

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A special opportunity awaits the K-State tennis team today.

The Wildcats lost to Nebraska 6-1 on Sunday to close out their regular season. Now, 10th-seeded K-State (7-13, 3-8) is set to face the Big 12 Conference Huskers again, this time in a neutral setting at the 2008 Big 12 Championship. The match will begin at 1:30 p.m. today in College Station, Texas.

Coach Steve Bietau said he is looking forward to the chance to play the Huskers again.

"We'll work out down there Wednesday," Bietau said. "This point in the season, there's not a lot you can do. I look forward to playing them again and playing them outside. Hopefully it will improve our results."

The results from Sunday featured some positives and some negatives. For the second straight match, the Wildcats won the doubles point.

Wins by the No. 2 doubles team of freshmen Antea Huljev and Vanessa Cottin and No. 3 doubles team of sophomore Natasha Vieira and senior Viviana Yrureta sparked K-State early.

It was Huljev and Cottin's second straight win after dropping four consecutive matches. But that was counteracted by the team's inability to win a singles match.

Only freshmen Pauline Guemas and Huljev were able to extend their matches beyond the second set. Guemas lost to Ashley Finnegan 3-6, 6-0, 6-1 and Wiveca Swarting defeated Huljev 5-7, 6-4, (10-8). To Bietau it breaks down to one simple aspect of the Wildcats' singles game.

"How we deal with pressure – in general we need to come up with answers when the heat is on," he said.

While the Wildcats did capture all six singles matches against Iowa State, singles have been a problem in recent matches. The last time K-State won at least three singles matches, excluding Iowa State, was March 28 against Oklahoma State.

This season, K-State is 0-8 when winning less than three singles matches. Even as the Wildcats have been playing against the upper-echelon teams in the Big 12, the issue has yet to be effectively resolved by the team.

"I think, for whatever reason the team hasn't been able to carryover things from doubles to singles," he said. "We weren't great in doubles, but we have been performing well. We need to get things to carryover."

Leading the charge on Sunday for the Huskers was senior Imke Reimers. She topped Yrureta 6-4, 6-0 and is 21-7 this season.

Other solid individual efforts came from freshman Jana Albers, who defeated junior Katerina Kudlackova 6-3, 6-0, and freshman Stephanie Evans who beat Cottin 6-4, 6-1. Albers is 17-5 in 2008 and Evans is 17-9.

Huljev and Yrureta will, leading the charge for the Wildcats. Huljev is 15-17 on the year. She has moved up from the No. 5 singles spot to the No. 2 spot since the season's beginning. Yrureta also has been a consistent performer for the Wildcats with a 16-15 record in 2008.

Yrureta, a senior from Puerto Ordaz, Venezuela has also had some success against ranked foes, defeating Wichita State's No. 77-ranked Stephanie Dalmacio 6-3, 1-6, 6-2 on Feb. 12.

Bietau said his beggest desire is to improve singles play,

"I want a little more spark in our singles matches," he said. "Our players seem to be solving problems in doubles well, but things come up in singles that they need to handle better."

Junior Katerina Kudlackova and the rest of the Wildcat tennis team hope to have a stronger performance against Nebraska today at the Big 12 Championships. They lost 6-1 last weekend to the Huskers.

Grey's Anatomy is back

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's a sad day when you are accustomed to missing Thursday night's "Grey's Anatomy" because of the writer's strike. But tonight, the magic will pick up where it left off with a long-awaited new episode.

This has been an intense season so far, and the cast certainly didn't leave us off at a good point. We were left wondering, "What happened with Izzie and George?" and "What will come of Meredith and Derek?" It was hard enough just making it from week to week, but this "hiatus" was more than most fans could handle.

All we're left to do is play catch up, so here's a quick recap of what's going on with all of the characters.

As fans should remember, the season began with Christina (Sandra Oh), Izzie (Katherine Heigl), Meredith (Ellen Pompeo) and Alex (Justin Chambers) becoming residents at Seattle Grace Hospital and having their own group of screwball interns to babysit. Among them, Lexie Grey (Chyler Leigh), Meredith's half-sister, falls into place. George (T.R. Knight), however, failed his intern test and is forced to repeat the program again. This is an uncomfortable commencement for season four. Christina choked at the alter, and Burke (Isaiah Washington) is completely out of the picture and off the show. The cast, now residents, must look up to Callie (Sarah Ramirez) for orders – when everyone knows Dr. Bailey (Chandra Wilson) should have been handed the job of chief resident.

IZZIE AND GEORGE (AND CALLIE)

Callie and George's marriage has been on a slow downfall since the exchanging of rings. Despite her previous notions, Izzie realizes she's in love with George and can't help but reveal this to him. George, who wants to hold true to the sanctity of marriage, tries to brush Izzie off and fix his relations with Callie. But of course, love takes its path and George and Izzie fall for each other and leave Callie behind.

DR. BAILEY

Though she's always portrayed as a rigid, strong woman in the medical field, Bailey faces many barriers this season. She doesn't receive the position of chief resident, which she knows she's more qualified for than Callie. Along with the challenges at work, Bailey's husband is unhappy with her attachment to work and disjointedness at home and with their infant son. Her marriage looks to be on its way to divorce.

CHRISTINA

After freezing at her wedding, Christina is left by Burke. They both knew she wasn't ready for marriage. Christina picks up the pieces of her broken relationship by throwing herself into work. Her passion for surgery seems to be her only motivation in life.

ALEX AND AVA

Alex's trauma patient from last season, Ava (Elizabeth Reaser), pops up at unusual times. Though they seemed to be falling in love, Alex does everything he can to shake his feelings for her. She had left her husband when she was in the ferry accident last season. She lost her sense of identity and developed a new personality and fantasy life with Alex while she was a patient in the hospital. Alex, admittedly, has moved on and is now seeking a relationship with Lexie.

DEREK AND MEREDITH (AND NURSE ROSE)

This relationship has jerked the hearts of audience members back and forth since day one. On again, off again – in love, in hate, lustful, neglectful – we've seen it all from these two. When things seem to reach a pinnacle of greatness, something goes wrong. Meredith gets way too philosophical, and they have problems. Thanks to Meredith's constant contemplation about her life and relationships, she acts cold toward Derek (Patrick Dempsey), and he catches the eye of another woman, Nurse Rose (Lauren Stamile). Meredith's spaciness gets so complicated that Derek actually shares a kiss with Rose and asks her out on a date.

MARK SLOAN AND ERICA HAHN

Sloan (Eric Dane), chief of plastic surgery, has developed an interest in Dr. Erica Hahn (Brooke Smith), head of cardiothoracic surgery. Hahn is hard to catch, and that attracts Sloan even more. His usual womanizing personality is softened by Hahn, and right before the last episode, they agreed to go on a date.

"Grey's Anatomy" is a cobweb of sneaky relationships, life saving, philosophy on life and probably one of the most addicting shows on TV right now. The new episode will air at 8 p.m. tonight on ABC.

UPCOMING MOVIES

BABY MAMA (PG-13)

Successful and single businesswoman Kate Holbrook has long put her career ahead of a personal life. Now 37, she's finally determined to have a kid on her own. But her plan is thrown a curve ball after she discovers she has only a million-to-one chance of getting pregnant. Undaunted, the driven Kate allows South Philadelphia working girl Angie Ostrowiski to become her unlikely surrogate. Simple enough. After learning from the steely head of their surrogacy center that Angie is pregnant, Kate goes into precision nesting mode: reading childcare books, baby-proofing the apartment and researching top pre-schools. But the executive's well-organized strategy is turned upside down when her "Baby's Mama" shows up at her doorstep with no place to live. An unstoppable force meets an immovable object as structured Kate tries to turn vibrant Angie into the perfect expectant mom. In a comic battle of wills, they will struggle their way through preparation for the baby's arrival. And in the middle of this tug-of-war, they'll discover two kinds of family: the one you're born to and the one you make.

DECEPTION (R)

An accounting consultant, while passing from one job to another, meets a charismatic, womanizing lawyer who personifies everything the numbers cruncher wishes he could be. The accountant delves into an erotic world of underground sex clubs.

HAROLD AND KUMAR ESCAPE FROM GUANTANAMO BAY (R)

The same morning that Harold and Kumar eat at White Castle, Harold learns that Maria, the girl he lusts after, has set off for Amsterdam. The pair decide to pursue her so Harold can proclaim his love. However, an overzealous airline passenger mistakes Kumar for a terrorist, and the plane is diverted as the duo get stuck in a case of mistaken identity.

DEAL (PG-13)

Alex Stillman is a cocky, hotshot, card-playing senior at Yale University. Alex dreams of becoming a professional Texas Hold'em poker player but does not yet have the skill to master the table. Fortunately for him, a chance encounter introduces Alex to retired poker legend, Tommy Vinson. Tommy was at the top of his game 20 years ago but gave it all up in order to save his family. Upon meeting Alex, Tommy realizes he can regain his own self-confidence, pride and a poker championship title by turning Alex into his protege. The two pair up and master every tournament they enter. The winning streak and friendship between the two is eventually thwarted by the interference of a Las Vegas call girl named Michelle. The pair eventually part ways and separately prepare for the World Poker Tour.

ASK THE FIFTH YEAR

Finding a job after graduation not easy unless you have brilliant major

ALEX PEAK

The irony in all this is that I wrote a column in the fall 2006 semester about how students should stop being lazy and just graduate in four years. And here I am, in my unplanned fifth year of college, still writing for the Collegian. Go figure.

I'm getting ready to graduate, and I'm stressing out over the job search. Any advice?

I would say start planning where you'd like to apply at least the semester before graduating, complete your résumé and cover letter, and start making contacts and going on office tours of places you'd like to work.

Job searching – unless you're an engineer or followed some other brilliant major – is miserable. You have to put yourself out on a line, dress fancy, smile a lot and master the perfect handshake. After all that, you just pray you get a call back.

I don't have a job yet, but I'm steps closer than I was. It took me until about a week ago to finally get the motivation to jump into the fight. I was in such a grouchy mood last Friday that I wallowed out of bed about 1 p.m. and uploaded my résumé to careerbuilder.com. I sent my information to four companies, and by Monday morning, I had heard from all the companies and had interviews scheduled. Who would have thought that bad moods and sleeping past noon could generate such productivity?

What's worse: moving in with your parents after graduation or living in a backyard tent?

After graduation, most students are between 21-24 years old, and after at least four years of living outside of your parents' domain, the thought of moving back in with them is almost worse than the thought of repeating college algebra or macroeconomics. I would suggest making as many friends as possible who have their own houses or apartments.

Make sure to have at least 10-14 of these friends so when you need to mooch off of them, they won't get overused or irritated by you. Cycle them out. If that doesn't work, build a tent or fort in your backyard. That way, you'll have some alone time in the great outdoors.

When you decide you want to see your parents, you can walk a few meters to see them.

As long as you keep your loud, circus games in the backyard and out of their sight, they'll probably be happy for your company at dinner every now and then.

My parents really want me to walk across the stage at graduation, but I don't want to. What should I do?

You should go ahead and just tell them you'll walk. But hours before graduation, start your scheming. Violent diarrhea, ankle sprains, sudden blindness in one eye, projectile vomiting and an overactive bladder should be able to get you out of the ceremony. Throw in a few tears when you tell your parent. Once you tell them about your embarrassing condition, they'll be apologizing to you.

run, 6-3 lead.

The lead was cut to two runs in the sixth inning when Bell hit a single to score Larson just after the Wildcats had made a pitching move to replace starting pitcher A.J. Morris with Ben Hornbeck. In the seventh, Irvine pulled within one run with a sacrifice fly from Linton to score Aaron Lowenstein from third.

K-State got a two-out single from Drew Biery in the seventh inning to score King from third and push the lead to 7-5.

Irvine tied the game in the eighth inning when Brock Bardeen knocked a pinch-hit homerun to right centerfield, bringing in Tony Asaro. Hill said he didn't know if his team had blown the game at that point.

"You sure didn't know," he said. "You have to give them a lot of credit because they hung in there, and obviously it all starts with the guys on the mound."

Thomas Rooks got the win for the Wildcats, pitching the last two innings of the game while Eric Pettis took the loss for Irvine.

K-State continues play with a three game home series against Texas starting 6:30 p.m. Friday at Tointon Stadium.

broadcasters only report the negative issues and the downside of war, but she said people also need to keep in mind the nature of news.

"It's our job to point out things that are going wrong or the small things that could be going better," Neumann said. "Unfortunately, we're not always there to say, 'This is going right; this is what's happening well.' There's certain things you're expected to do [as a journalist], and we always point out the anomalies in the world."

When it comes to reporting or listening to news about the war, Neumann said she tries not to think in terms of negative or positive, because in addition to being a journalist, she is a military wife. She said as long as reporters are being fair and truthful in their reporting, even if others view it as negative, people need to respect it.

"As long as I'm upholding my profession's integrity ... it's not about whether it's negative or positive," she said. "It's about what actually is. That's how I look at news – is it right, or is it not right."

Lupe said he understands that death counts and invasions need to be reported. However, he said he just wishes media would add more balance to their coverage by showing Americans more of the positive outcomes of the war – like his brigade rebuilding Iraqi schools.

"There's really no good thing about war overall," Lupe said. "People are dying. But I think, eventually, Iraq will be better from it – that's my positive opinion from us going in and helping them out.

"I think that because of all the constant portrayal of the deaths and bombs and all this other stuff – it's all negative, negative, negative ...

"They definitely need to report all the deaths and all that other stuff that's going on, but they should also go out and see the good stuff that's going on – the more positive stuff."

matters.

"I didn't expect a response from the foundation right away," LeBlanc said.

After receiving the same response from the donors to the foundation, LeBlanc contacted the Kansas Board of Regents, who showed him some support.

"The K-State Endowment is an independent group," LeBlanc explained. "They have been limited in what they are able to do, but having them on my side puts a little bit more pressure on the KSU Foundation."

David Weaver, vice president for investments and real estate and chief investment officer for the KSU Foundation, recently made a statement about the foundation's response to its investment decisions.

"We don't engage in approving or disapproving the companies that our investment managers invest in, but we do have grave reservations about investing in those companies on the Sudan Divestment list, for both moral and economic reasons," Weaver said in the statement.

LeBlanc said the entire purpose of the demonstration is to create awareness about the genocide and to encourage people to get involved in anyway possible.

"The more I keep doing, the more I get fired up," LeBlanc said. "I want to create an awareness about the crisis in Darfur and about the K-State Foundation and what they can do to help."

be a bone marrow recruiter and bring awareness to the cause.

She has even tried contacting Oprah to make her drives become national, she said.

Knight said she wants everyone to know that it is easy to become a part of the bone marrow registry and encourages everyone to think about becoming a potential donor.

"The chances that you will be a match for someone are slim, but you could save someone's life if you get called," she said.

The bone marrow drive will take place from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Friday in Union 204 and 206.

THE NEED

— Every year, more than 10,000 Americans get life-threatening diseases that only can be cured with a bone marrow transplant from an unrelated donor. The patients do not have a family donor and transplant is their only hope for a cure.

— Since it began operations in 1987, the National Marrow Donor Program has facilitated more than 30,000 marrow or blood cell transplants for patients who do not have matching donors in their families.

— On average, the NMDP facilitates more than 300 transplants each month.

Missing teenagers found in Chanute

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three teenage runaways who were reported missing last weekend were found Wednesday in Chanute, Kan., according to the KMAN-AM 1350 Web site.

According to Riley County Police Department Lt. Kurt Moldrup, a tip from someone in the Manhattan area led police to search in the Chanute area for Robin Calhoon, 16; Jessika Hodges, 15; and Maia Manning, 14, who had been missing since attending the Spring Game on Saturday. A follow-up with one of the girl's boyfriend's family proved the girls were, in fact, in the Chanute area. The family of the boyfriend was apparently unaware of the girls' runaway status. Reports from the Chanute Police Department stated one of the girls surrendered immediately when confronted by officers, while the other two fled and tried to hide unsuccessfully in a train yard.

All three girls have been returned to Manhattan and are currently in the care of KVC Behavioral HealthCare, Inc.

3 professors earn university's highest professorial honor

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One is an expert taste-tester, while the other two have made careers out of studying specific animal processes.

Though they come from different backgrounds and research focuses, all three professors at least share a few similarities. They are some of the leading researchers in their field, they work closely with higher education students and they all expressed joy and shock about receiving the distinction of university distinguished professor.

University distinguished professor is the highest honor a professor can receive at K-State. Only a few professors are named distinguished professors each year. Faculty and administration nominate tenured professors who have excelled in their areas of research, and a certain amount are approved by the University Distinguished Professors Group, which is composed of previously named distinguished professors.

TESTING THE SENSES

Edgar Chambers IV, director of the Sensory Analysis Center and professor of sensory analysis and consumer behavior, is not just a taste-tester. He tests products' effectiveness for all human senses.

CHALMERS

"If you can taste it, smell it, touch it, feel it or hear it, we work with it in one way or another," Chambers said.

Chambers and a group of graduate students and professors in the Sensory Analysis Center mostly test food, but he said they also test products like automobile paints, room deodorizers and computer monitors.

Chambers said the center tests products from all over the world, sometimes even traveling to other countries to compare products, test for pleasing products and determine how to duplicate these products in the U.S. He said sense-testers, who Chambers calls highly trained panelists, have traveled and tasted gelato ice cream in Italy, artisinal cheeses in Germany and soy milk in Korea.

One of the main goals of the center is to train students to become so-called experts in sensory analysis. Chambers said students usually need four to six weeks to learn vocabulary for describing the products and how to evaluate every aspect of a product.

"The flavor of a product is hard to describe," he said. "The typical consumer can't do that very well.

"If you taste like some things and say 'Oh, it tastes like lemon,' my panel can tell you whether the lemon was expressed in a press or whether it was distilled by steam or whether it came from California or Argentina, and sometimes even what company manufactured it."

These students have several opportunities to test products, as the center is one of the largest centers in the world, Chalmers said.

"As far as I know, we have the largest applied sensory research center in the world at a university," he said.

K-State students participate in a demonstration about genocide in Darfur to raise awareness at the K-State Student Union Thursday afternoon.

Students demonstrate for relief for victims of Darfur killings

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The humility some K-State students feel is so strong that it caused them to take action and bring the genocide in Darfur, Africa, to the attention of the K-State community with a demonstration Thursday.

"In a world of suffering, why should we be so blessed?" was written on a poster in Bosco Plaza as a visual part of the demonstration.

About 15 students laid on the plaza concrete during a two-hour event with music and signs displaying statistics about the genocide.

The display's participants drew much attention from those who passed by.

Philip LeBlanc, senior in print journalism, coordinated the event in response to a lack of divestment from the KSU Foundation to help Darfur.

Philip said he has been talking with the KSU Foundation for the past four months, urging them to divest from one of the 22 companies who are involved with helping those in Darfur. He has received support from the Kansas Board of Regents and is now seeking support from members of the K-State community.

"The K-State Endowment is an independent group," he explained. "They have been limited in what they are able to do, but having them on my side puts a little bit more pressure on the K-State Foundation."

The event drew media attention from Manhattan and Topeka. Many people who walked by asked questions about the Darfur genocide.

"A lot of people really don't know much about what's going on in Sudan, and I think this will raise some awareness," said Shannon LeBlanc, freshman in psychology.

Signs were posted at the K-State Student Union during a demonstration that offered information and facts about the Darfur genocide Thursday.

Shannon, who is Philip's younger sister, helped with the event and said she has been contacting people through text messages, Facebook.com and other ways in order to spread the word about Darfur.

"This is just the first step," she said. "Hopefully, K-State will start divesting for Sudan and more universities will divest as well."

David Cohen, non-degree graduate student in business administration, said though he didn't know the LeBlancs or others involved with the event, he wanted to come and show his support for their efforts.

"I appreciate them trying to do something, and I appreciate them trying to get K-State to do something," he said.

Cohen is of Jewish descent and said he is passionate about ending genocide because he sees a parallel between this current crisis and the crisis his ancestors went through in the World War II Holocaust.

Cohen said he invited as many people as he could to the event because many are not aware of what is going on and they might want to help in the effort to promote awareness.

"If K-State knew, people would come," he said. "It's just that people don't know, and that's why they are doing this demonstration."

The majority of the students involved participated in the demonstration for the full two hours and said they felt accomplishment when the campus carillon struck two o'clock.

Philip said he was pleased with the supportive turnout and was excited to have been approached by other students and organizations who want to help him in his fight.

Community discusses benefits of carrying concealed guns on campus

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

Kris Kobach, Kansas GOP chairman, argues favorably for allowing students with concealed carry permits to carry on campus during a debate Thursday evening in the K-State Student Union's room 212.

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the shootings at Virginia Tech and NIU, the topic of carrying concealed weapons on campus has been a hot one for students. In response to these events, K-State's Kansas Federation of Students for Concealed Carry on Campus conducted a forum Thursday night to discuss the benefits of carrying firearms on campus.

"People have the right to defend themselves," said Concealed Carry Instructor, Patricia Stoneking. "To post any place as a gun-free zone is to basically pose them as a target."

Stoneking, also a board member for the Kansas State Rifle Association, was one of the four panelists who gave their opinions for concealed carry on campus in front of students, faculty and community members.

Forum participants discussed the issue of school shootings and the amount of concern people might have with carrying weapons on campus.

"People kill people – guns don't kill people," Stoneking said. "There are other things that can be used to kill people – not just guns."

Students for Concealed Carry on Campus was started in March and its main goal is to promote carrying concealed weapons on campus.

"If someone wants to kill people, they can," said Virginia Webb, junior in public relations. "The government can't protect us, and we should be able to protect ourselves."

Webb said she heard about the event through her friends in College of Republicans who are involved in SCCC. Webb said she thought the forum was slightly one-sided because the group was unable to find people to speak about the negative aspects of concealed carry. Though there was a lack of debate, Webb said the event was still beneficial because it raised awareness of the need to have concealed carry on campus.

"I think that anyone who wants a gun can get one legally or illegally, so the people who get them legally are not the ones killing people," she explained.

SCCC president Ryan Willcott said there probably wouldn't have been tragedies at Virginia Tech and NIU had the universities allowed firearms.

"In both of these situations, the shooters came in with plenty of ammo because they knew that no one would be able to defend themselves," Willcott, freshman in business administration, said.

Phi Beta Sigma fraternity reclaims historical house

By Brandon McAtee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On Saturday, Phi Beta Sigma fraternity will celebrate the return of a house with historical significance.

The historically black fraternity was established on the K-State campus in 1917, when it became the first chapter on an integrated campus west of the Mississippi River. The fraternity moved into its chapter house in 1921, only to lose it in 1930. The house has stood the test of time and is now back in the hands of the Sigmas through the generosity of past members, said Pat Patton, K-State research specialist for University Archives.

The celebration will begin Saturday in the Hemisphere Room at Hale Library at 1:14 p.m. Those in attendance will be able to see historic pieces from the house, along with a DVD about the chapter's history.

The event will continue with tours of the Delta chapter house, located at 1020 Colorado St.

The house was lost in 1930 as a casualty of Depression-era struggles for funding, Patton said.

She said she discovered the house when she was looking for information on the founder, Charles I. Brown.

"I found the house had a photograph in a 1920s Royal Purple," she said. "It was very unusual for a black fraternity to have a photograph or information in a Royal Purple then. So, that was a great find for us. I then looked around for a two-story house and ended up finding it."

After losing the house, Patton said there were Sigma members in the 1980s who felt they needed a chapter here but were unaware of the house's history.

During a symposium in August 2006, the Phi Beta Sigma international president, Paul Griffin, and other men came to Manhattan and toured the Delta chapter house.

Jonathan Mason, Phi Beta Sigma member, helped spearhead the funding to buy back the house. He said there was a man in the organization who did research on the property and found out many of the fraternity members lived in the house in the 1920s.

"There is a lot of history there," Mason said. "The importance of getting that house was to regain a significant amount of our history."

Mason then went to negotiate with the owner of the property and came up with a reasonable selling price. He gathered about seven or eight members of the organization, who pulled their resources together to make the initial payment for the deposit on the house. Later, Mason negotiated with a number of banks and received financing under his name for the property.

Mason said he hopes to be able to showcase the history of the house with a number of historic items members have found, including papers.

Student Senate appoints new committee chairs

By Michael Champlin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last night, the Student Senate appointed six students to chair the Senate's standing committees. The Senate also appointed William Lopez, senior in finance, to serve as senate secretary and Matt Spade, freshman in biological and agricultural engineering, to serve as senate parliamentarian.

During the first open period, representatives from Students for Conceal and Carry on Campus spoke about changing the current K-State policy that prohibits students from carrying concealed weapons on campus. Ben Davis, sophomore in political science, said that the issue of concealed carry on campus is not a partisan issue, but an issue of campus safety. "People that are law-abiding and responsible should be able to defend themselves," Davis said.

Bryan Little, senior in social studies education, said current policies make students feel safe rather than providing safety.

A question-and-answer session followed the presentation. Mark Andre, senior in architecture, asked if more weapons on campus in a crisis situation would create confusion for police. Little said most gun fights last 30 seconds and are over before police arrive. John Porter, junior in mechanical engineering, asked what college campuses allow concealed weapons on campus. Davis said that 11 colleges, located in Utah, Colorado and Virginia, allow concealed weapons. The Senate spent 45 minutes discussing the issue.

U.S. Army Sergeant Ryan Gardner also gave a presentation during the Senate's open period on how the Fort Riley office of Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers is working to improve relations between soldiers and students. BOSS recently surveyed Ft. Riley soldiers to gain understanding of relations between soldiers and students. Participants in the survey were asked what could be done to improve relations. Common answers included sports events, dance teams and an organizational day.

The Senate appointed Emily Haug, junior in political science, to chair the Special Committee on Big 12 Student Government Affairs. Kristen Tremonti, freshman in family and consumer education, was approved as a student senator in order to fill a vacancy from the College of Human Ecology.

Oil-soaked towels start laundromat dryer fire

By Salena Strate
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan Fire Department responded to a fire report at 11:22 p.m. Wednesday at Speed Wash Laundry, 1118 Moro Street.

Upon arriving at the scene, firefighters evacuated the building, said Don Francis, MFD deputy chief.

Firefighters also blocked Moro Street between 11th and 12th streets for 40 minutes.

Francis said someone had tried to dry vegetable-oil soaked towels, which led to the fire.

He said if towels with that substance are not properly washed, spontaneous heating can occur. Francis said the fire was isolated to the dryer that the towels were in.

He said lost damages were estimated at about $100.

No injuries were reported.

FEEDBACK

Engineers, tall toilets challenge students

Friday's To The Point column features the editorial board's favorite and least favorite Fourum comments throughout the week. The board members will state their opinions about selected Fourum comments.

Not to promote gold-digging, but shouldn't the girls be going after the engineers?

Or how about journalism majors? Don't forget, engineers: There are other majors at K-State that earn more money than yours.

To the ladies: I drive a blue minivan with a porn star sticker on the back. I'll be taking numbers.

OK, that's just creepy. You might as well try Facebook.com chat to find yourself another secret stalker.

So, whose idea was it to make the toilet on the first floor of Throckmorton – the handicapped one – like, four feet tall? I feel like a sixth grader because my feet can't reach the floor.

My day would be so much better if the disc golfers could keep their clothes on.

Disc golf is not a real sport, so there is no way one should sweat while participating in the event.

Abortion art

Yale student crosses bodily boundaries with class project

Last week, it came to light that Yale University art student Aliza Shvarts created quite the controversial piece for her senior art project.

KELSEY CHILDRESS

She reportedly self-inseminated herself, then subsequently took abortifacient drugs in order to induce miscarriages. She videotaped it all, saved the blood and wrapped the blood and Vaseline in plastic around a large suspended cube with images of her "abortions" being projected onto the cube, according to an article in the Yale Daily News on April 18.

Yale claimed that Shvarts admitted the supposed abortions were a hoax, and Shvarts said herself that she is unsure whether she was actually pregnant at any given time during the nine-month creation of the project. Now, the university will not permit her to show the project unless she admits it was a hoax.

An April 21 press release from Yale, stated, "In the normal course of events, Ms. Shvarts' project would be installed at the School of Art for critique and discussion with a committee of faculty. In this case, we will not permit her to install the project unless she submits a clear and unambiguous written statement that her installation is a work of fiction: that she did not try to inseminate herself and induce miscarriages, and that no human blood will be physically displayed in her installation."

Whether the abortions actually occurred, Shvarts claimed she is attempting to incite discussion about the relationship between art and the human body. In a guest opinion article on April 18 in the Yale Daily News, Shvarts wrote, "This piece – in its textual and sculptural forms – is meant to call into question the relationship between form and function as they converge on the body. The artwork exists as the verbal narrative, as an installation that will take place in Green Hall, as a time-based performance, as a independent concept, as a myth and as a public discourse."

She also went on to write that what is considered "normal" about the human body, like heterosexuality and pregnancy, needs to be called into question, and her piece was trying to show this.

However provocative her project might have been, Shvarts' attempts to create awareness about society's concepts of the human body failed miserably. Instead of getting people more interested in personal freedom, they are spending their time attacking her and her school for allowing such an exhibit to be created. Her actions have pushed people further away from abortion, giving pro-life activists a chance to highlight the vulgar, gritty details of abortion.

A woman's choice of whether or not to dispel something that is in her body is a private, personal choice and should in no way be highlighted as art. Abortion is not supposed to be entertainment. It further degrades women who are attempting to make a serious, life-altering choice.

Candidates war views shift as election proceeds

After Hillary Clinton's win in the Pennsylvania primary, a hopeful nation holds its breath. After five long years of misinformed and ill-defined action in the Middle East, we are now one step closer to clarity.

MARQUIS CLARK

According to ABC News, Sen. Clinton has joined the ranks of the hawkish right and dedicated herself to a century of conflict. The ratcheting up of rhetoric that led to the Pennsylvania primary culminated in the senator from New York who said, "I want the Iranians to know that if I'm the president, we will attack Iran. ... In the next 10 years, during which they might foolishly consider launching an attack on Israel, we would be able to totally obliterate them."

Lest we dismiss Clinton's commitment to war as a campaign ploy, we need only look back at her original vote to authorize the war in Iraq. Also, Clinton's support of the Kyl-Lieberman amendment in 2007, which designated the Iranian Revolutionary Guard Corps as a terrorist organization and also contained language that says it is a critical, national interest of the United States to counter Iran's influence among the Shia population of Iraq, helps clarify her position.

She joins fellow presidential nominee Sen. John McCain, in committing our lives, those of our children and possibly our grandchildren to extended military conflict. While the Democrats often have misinterpreted McCain's comments about "100 years" in Iraq, it is hard to misunderstand his overall stance on Iran.

In March, McCain mistakenly stated that largely Sunni al-Qaida is going back into predominantly Shia Iran and receiving training and then coming back into Iraq. McCain quickly realized his mistake and got back to the point of his statements, primarily that removing troops from Iraq would be a mistake and would signal a win in the War on Terror for the extremists.

But McCain isn't all business. When asked about military action against Iran while campaigning in South Carolina, he answered with Vince Vance and the Valiants' 1980 parody of the Beach Boys', "Bomb Iran."

Of course, they both join President Bush – who unfortunately is enduring the lowest presidential rating in the history of polling at 28 percent – in their undying commitment to victory.

I, for one, am relieved we have moved past the silly, hopeful times of the last three years. Can you believe we were ever naïve enough to elect a Democratic Congress in hopes they would bring some end to the wars being waged in the Middle East? It's good to know that as a country we are committed to the status quo.

Thank you, citizens of Pennsylvania, for helping us dodge a bullet. Who could want a president who insists upon negotiating with other countries and votes against unpopular and expensive wars waged on false pretenses? Not this guy.

It's funny. The $529.5 million wasn't raised to put signs all over campus.

Thank you to all the people who eat at the Derb and throw their food in the trash before putting their tray on the belt. You really help the dishwashers.

Dear Collegian: Please use spell check, especially with your headlines.

While I agree writing on sculpture is in poor taste, there is nothing — absolutely nothing — bad about the way Cadence sounds.

I would just like to say that now that I have my imagination back, I'm still not giving back the one I borrowed.

To the couple making out in the Union: Too much PDA.

First off, I would like to apologize for my fellow Cadence members' actions. Secondly, if you didn't like how we sounded, maybe you shouldn't have given us a standing ovation.

Jazz Education building to close doors today

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

The International Association for Jazz Education, located on the south side of Claflin between College Avenue and Seth Childs Road, will close its doors after 40 years of service because of financial difficulties.

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After 40 years of serving the Manhattan community, the International Association for Jazz Education has decided to permanently close its doors because of ongoing financial problems.

The goal of the IAJE was to assure the continuation of worldwide growth and development of jazz and jazz education. It conducted programs to promote leadership and create an appreciation of jazz and its heritage.

In a recent statement released on the IAJE Web site, president Chuck Owen said the organization has voted to file for bankruptcy under Chapter 7 of the federal bankruptcy law.

"While over 250 individuals contributed just over $12,000, this was simply not enough to address the accumulated debt of the organization or its urgent need for cash relief," he said.

Owen has served as president of the IAJE since 2006 and is a professor of jazz studies and director of the Center for Jazz Composition at the University of South Florida. In the statement, Owens said the executive board and professional staff worked diligently to face the declining resources and to meet the needs of the members of IAJE.

"While there may be those who question specific decisions or strategies in efforts to meet this crisis, the dedication and integrity of these individuals should never be in doubt," he said.

IAJE was founded in 1968, and its first executive director was Matt Betton, a jazz musician and music-business owner in Manhattan.

According to the K-State library archives, Betton graduated from K-State, helped start the program and was important in the development of the jazz community at K-State as well as in the Manhattan community. His connection with K-State helped tie the university with the IAJE, which since then has had an impact on the music department.

"They've got a 40-year history that's been associated with Manhattan," said professor of music and department head Gary Mortenson.

Mortenson had personal friends who were part of the organization, and he said he has followed the IAJE closely for the past couple of years because the organization has been a large resource in the community.

"The jazz world is hurting for not having IAJE around," he said. "I really hope this organization can make some sort of comeback."

Mortenson said IAJE was important because the best way to continue jazz is through education, which the organization was known for.

"Jazz is the one unique cultural entity worldwide and is really an integral part of American life and a part of our heritage," he said.

K-State-Salina to broaden classes offered

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State-Salina is expanding its curriculum to include a degree in family studies and human services and different options in the engineering technology department.

K-State-Salina will offer a general option bachelor's degree in family studies and human services and a digital media option in engineering technology beginning in fall 2008.

David Delker, associate dean of academics and the contact person for the new FSHS degree, said students already are enrolling in FSHS classes for the fall, and interest has especially increased in the last few days.

Delker said the main focus of K-State-Salina traditionally has been aviation and engineering technology. The school was founded in 1965 and partnered with K-State in 1991. About 900 students are enrolled there.

Now the Salina campus is expanding its majors to meet the needs of potential students in the area. Delker said friends and spouses of students said they would attend K-State-Salina if it offered a major in social services.

"FSHS is based on a real need that we've been hearing for many years in this part of the state," Delker said. "We're always looking for new ways to serve the community. We look at this as a good stepping stone in perhaps some other related areas."

Delker said the campus is expecting to accumulate "quite a few students" with the new programs and increase enrollment in the existing programs.

Dixie Schierlman, associate dean of student life at K-State-Salina, said the school has mailed out postcards and posters to businesses, social services and childcare providers in the area to advertise FSHS.

"We think it's a great program that will attract nontraditional students since we're offering classes in the evenings," Schierlman said.

Bill Genereux, assistant professor in the engineering technology department, has helped create the new digital media option within the engineering technology department.

This option is meant to teach students how to incorporate computer programming with the visual aspects of computers. The digital media option allows students to use computers in creative ways, Genereux said.

"My hope is to help students who like visual communications but also want to know how the technology works."

Genereux based the digital media option on skills that employers look for when hiring. This includes competence in Adobe PhotoShop and Illustrator and graphic design skills.

"There are few programs out there where students can learn all that employers are looking for," Genereux said. "Our goal was to put an educational program together to meet those needs, and to give [students] an experience where they can do it all."

Genereux said students already are taking digital media courses online. The official program will begin in fall 2008. He said many students also have contacted him to ask questions about the new option.

"I have a feeling this will attract students to K-State who might have gone other places," Genereux said.

Women's golf team to travel to Stillwater for Big 12 Championship

By Cole Manbeck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team looks to build on its momentum as team members travel south for the Big 12 Championship in Stillwater, Okla., beginning today and ending Sunday.

The Wildcats capped off their regular season April 7-8, at the Canes and Cardinal Classic in Miami, Fla., with a 10th-place finish, marking their best finish of the spring season.

The 38-over par 902 at the Canes and Cardinal Classic also marked the second best score the Wildcats have posted in the spring and fall seasons combined and was the best-scoring finish in a 54-hole tournament this season.

Coach Kristi Knight said her team is focused and ready to get back out on the course after a couple of weeks off.

"They are looking forward to the challenge," she said. "They have practiced well the last couple of weeks, and they are ready to go. They have a mindset of going out and playing well the next few days."

The Wildcats will face a tough field, with eight of the 12 teams from the conference ranking in golfweek.com's top 50.

The 3-day, 54-hole tournament will be played at Karsten Creek Golf Course.

Knight said her team will be in for a challenge, partly because of the participating teams but also because of the difficulty of the course.

"This is a tough golf course, but a very fair golf course as well," she said. "It rewards good shots and penalizes bad shots."

Knight said one of the keys for her team's potential success this weekend is patience.

"This course penalizes impatience," she said. "We need to be successful on the green. We need to make a lot of pars. Par is a great score on this golf course. There are several places where you have to go out there and not force things and just take a bogey and move on."

Oklahoma State will be the host university of the tournament.

OSU has won more championships (five), than any other university in the 12-year existence of the Big 12 Conference.

The Wildcats' highest finish in the Big 12 Conference Championship occurred in both the 2002 and 2003 seasons when they finished in 6th place.

This year's Wildcats will be led by seniors Michelle Regan and Kali Quick, who have also led the team in scoring this year with a 76.96 average.

The pair has nine top-20 finishes this season between them, including five top-5 appearances and one individual victory.

"If we do everything that we are capable of, then we have a chance to go out there and have a very nice tournament," Knight said.

Handful of Cats to compete in Nebraska Open in Lincoln

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Led by the track and field team's top multi-event athletes, a group of eight Wildcats will compete at the Nebraska Open Sunday in Lincoln, Neb.

The group includes the men's top decathletes, freshmen Moritz Cleve and Rok Derzanic and junior Adam Fretwell, as well as two of the women's heptathletes, freshman Annika Schoenebeck and senior Lindsay Grigoriev.

The number of Wildcats headed to Lincoln is relatively small because some team members have been competing in the Drake Relays, in Des Moines, Iowa, since Thursday, while many others have the weekend off.

Head track and field coach Cliff Rovelto said the number of athletes he will send to the Nebraska Open could change, as some Wildcats who competed Thursday and today at Drake could travel to Lincoln to compete again on Sunday. The group of Wildcats in Lincoln will still be mostly multi-event and field athletes, he said.

The K-State women's tennis team upset the seventh-seeded Nebraska Cornhuskers, 4-3, Thursday at the George P. Mitchell Tennis Center in College Station, Texas.

With the win, the Wildcats avenged a 6-1 loss suffered on Sunday in Lincoln.

Senior Viviana Yrureta and sophomore Natasha Vieira started off the Wildcats' winnings with an 8-2 win over Amber Chandronnait and Stephanie Evans.

At No. 1, doubles senior Olga Klimova and junior Katerina Kudlackova topped the Intercollegiate Tennis Association's No. 52-ranked team of Jana Albers and Imke Reimers, 8-5.

Freshmen Vanessa Cottin and Antea Huljev captured their match against Wiveca Swarting and Maria Ring, 7-6. The Nebraska duo did not finish the match.

In singles play, the Wildcats fell in the first match as Albers downed Kudlackova 6-1, 6-1.

The Huskers took a 2-1 lead when Ashley Finnegan defeated Pauline Guemas 6-4, 6-3.

Huljev countered the Huskers' effort with a 6-4, 6-1 win over Swarting.

At the No. 5 spot, Chandronnait extended the Cornhuskers lead to 3-2 with a 7-6 (4), 6-0.

Then the Wildcats comeback began.

At No. 4 singles, Cottin had dropped her first set against Evans, 1-6, then took the next two sets for a 1-6, 7-6 (4), 6-4 victory.

With the outcome of the match in the balance, Yrureta avenged a Sunday loss against Reimers with a 6-1, 2-6, 7-6 (10) win.

The win sends the Wildcats into the Big 12 tournament quarterfinals today against number two-seeded Texas at 3 p.m.

Fresh off a 9-7 upset win over No. 11-ranked UC Irvine, the Wildcats will stay home this weekend with a three-game series against Texas, starting at 6:30 tonight at Tointon Stadium.

Junior starting pitcher Justin Murray is projected to get the first chance to face the Longhorns tonight. Murray has a 2-0 record and has struck out 28 batters in 49 innings pitched.

MURRAY

Texas (24-17, 8-10 Big 12 Conference) enters the series ranked No. 25 in the nation and trying to stay in the Top 25, having lost seven of its last nine contests. Last weekend, the Longhorns were swept at home in a three-game series by No. 16 Oklahoma St. and lost two of three games this week against No. 8 Missouri.

The Wildcats' win over Irvine on Wednesday gave them their third win in the past five games, following two wins in the series against Texas Tech before the two-game series with the Anteaters.

K-State (19-21, 5-10) is currently ranked eighth in the Big 12 standings just below KU, who is 25-19 overall and 5-10 in the conference. Texas ranks in fifth in the league standings.

Columnist misses mark on art argument

Editor,

Being in the library anyway, I didn't see the harm in checking what Webster had to say about art following Mr. Pham's Tuesday editorial. Webster's Third New International Dictionary, 1993 edition, has 20+ definitions for "art." Mr. Pham doesn't even bother to define "post-modernism" or "Reduction ad absurdum," let alone "art" or "profanity."

Now, I'm not an artist, and in fact, I know very little about art, but I do have an understanding that art tends to be created by individuals for individuals. Mr. Pham has made two rather tragic assumptions in his article: One: There ought to be someone to make a hard-line arbitration on what is art and what is not, and Two: He is qualified to be that person.

The art of Damien Hirst (I can name-drop too), which featured chopped-up animals in glass tanks filled with formaldehyde, evokes something for me although its validity is frequently challenged. So, is it art? I know how I feel, but I wouldn't dream of telling other people what to think. The discussion outlined in the article's opening is crucial, but Mr. Pham seems to feel this process ought to be skipped over, making his article less of an intellectual examination of what makes something art and more of a propaganda piece for his views of the culture war. Maybe he should ask an actual art student.

Daniel Ireton
SORTING SUPERVISOR
HALE LIBRARY

Editor,

After reading Adam Pham's article on modern art, I was stunned. First, Mr. Pham's article used the Fox News tactic of using a few outliers as an example of the entire movement, with gross generalizations to make the reader believe that is a representative sample of the group, which is obviously unfair and shows his lack of interest in writing an article that was fully researched and thoughtful.

Secondly, his examples were unresearched and his arguments were basically copied from a Facebook.com group. Pham's contention that the modern artists are only performing to talk about themselves and not the art shows his utter lack of understanding of the whole movement as well as the individual artists he used as examples.

Aliza Shvarts did not impregnate herself, and she did not induce any miscarriages. Yale University officials released a statement after the Yale Daily News printed their article (which is obviously where Mr. Pham got his information) that read, "The entire project is an art piece, a creative fiction designed to draw attention to the ambiguity surrounding form and function of a woman's body." Each artist he used as an example had a reason and a concept behind their work–not simply to shock.

Finally, Mr. Pham's critique was utterly hollow because he did not bother to read the artists' statements concerning the work and only drew his conclusions from other people's assessments of the works.

K-State students should practice empathy

Editor,

Anyone who has ever read the Fourum knows that negative feelings permeate our campus, from pet peeves to something startlingly close to hatred. We know this is normal, and so it's tempting to ignore it. But normal isn't necessarily natural. The way things are does not, and should never, dictate how things should be. I think we K-Staters need to practice empathy. Dictionaries tell us that pity, sympathy and empathy are synonyms. They aren't. If you pity someone, it's like standing at the top of a cliff, feeling sorry for the guy trapped at the bottom–there's no action. Sympathy is throwing down a rope; you care enough to take some type of action. But empathy is like climbing down and helping them to the top, engaging in the danger they face. Sometimes empathy is that hard.

We have a lot of labels–gender, age, race, class, style. These things help us define ourselves, but at some point, we have to move beyond them. We don't destroy them; we simply come to an understanding of a world that transcends and includes them. Guys can learn to empathize with girls and vice versa. We can empathize with the international student who struggles with English and the pedestrian who steps out in front of us (because we've all been on both sides of that situation). The crucial step is that when we see "different," we curb our tendency to think "wrong."

Effects of war pose threat to Mother Earth

Editor,

This year we can do more for Earth Day by broadening the scope of its current focus on our natural environment to include our social environment too. The Dalai Lama said a few days ago, "How we treat the environment can depend on how we treat others on a planet with 6 billion people." It should be made clearer that our interactions can be detrimental to our environment as well. War especially is a threat to our Mother Earth.

First, the direct destruction involved with war takes its toll on our wildlife and landscape. Hezbollah rockets have started forest fires. An Israeli bombing of a Lebanon power plant created an oil spill 150 kilometers long. The U.S. sprayed nearly 80 million liters of defoliants over Vietnam forests. Habitats are demolished for new military bases or blown up by landmines. Fires from bombs put harmful toxins and greenhouse gases into the air. The list goes on.

The opportunity cost of war is as equally large. The United States alone spends $485 billion per year on its military, with an estimated $275 million every day on the occupation of Iraq, while environmental spending is less than $30 billion per year. This money could be used to fund initiatives for clean energy, environmental education and more. I don't mean to take away from our traditional environmental activism. But if we're truly concerned with doing justice for our environment, we need to also do justice to ourselves by striving toward peace.

Gov. signs bill, gives money to state colleges

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius signed the Mega Budget Bill Monday, using her line-item veto on a provision that would have unnecessarily tied up future gaming revenues, according to a press release from the governor's office.

SEBELIUS

A provision that would have given money generated from gambling to the University of Kansas School of Pharmacy was included in the bill.

"[The vetoed item] tried to put our gambling money into three categories that could never be spent for anything else," said Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan.

Carlin said Sebelius felt the restrictions of the bill would be too great and would not allow the money to be spent well.

Carlin also said Sebelius wants the necessary funds for the school to be raised through bonds, not with gambling revenue.

The three current uses for money generated through gambling are state debt reduction, property tax relief and infrastructure improvement.

The bill also will give $10 million to the Kansas Board of Regents. That is half the amount Sebelius asked for, but the university is hopeful that all $20 million will be granted after the legislative session next week.

"We are still hopeful we can achieve the governor's original recommendations," said Susan Peterson, director of governmental relations for K-State.

Carlin said the budget bill needs to be passed by the end of the fiscal year, which is June 30, but she is confident the bill will be passed much sooner than that.

"We are going to meet April 30 to discuss the omnibus bill," Carlin said. "We hope to get it all worked out then."

Carlin said the omnibus bill is passed to cover costs of new legislation.

Aggieville clothing store offers shoppers convenience, select styles

By Aubree Casper
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

To most Manhattan residents and visitors, Aggieville is a few city blocks consisting of several popular bars. Its weekend and entertainment side often overshadows the many daytime stores that exist scattered among the nighttime bars and restaurants. This stereotype has had an effect on locally owned and operated clothing stores that come and go on Moro Street and Manhattan Avenue.

Former Aggieville stores like Gigi's and Patricia's Undercover have fallen victim to the pressures of competing with the Manhattan Town Center. However, shops like Zotcis Attire, Krystallos and Trendy with a Twist have snuck into the Aggieville scene, and these retailers strive to offer a shopping experience patrons won't find at any mall store.

Among these owners is Sara Strothman-Meyer, owner of Zotcis women's clothing store at 12th and Moro streets in Aggieville. A K-State graduate, Strothman-Meyer said she opened Zotcis and her other business, Cartridge World, without fear of competition from the mall. Now, with over six years of success, Zotcis is still going strong, said Ashley Banman, senior in apparel and textiles marketing and intern at the store.

Banman said the most difficult part of keeping a local store afloat is drawing in new customers. Unlike mall stores like Abercrombie and Fitch, Claire's, or Express, where people know what to expect and find, Zotcis creates reasons for people to come in on a regular basis and has taken an active approach in finding new customers.

For example, some women who might be looking for a new top don't want to risk showing up to a party in the same outfit as another girl. To prevent this, Banman said Zotcis will typically carry only six pieces of a single item. Once they're sold, a new inventory is put on the racks so an ever-changing selection keeps customers coming back.

The latest promotion at Zotcis is giving back to the department that helped Strothman-Meyer prepare for her career as a clothing boutique owner. Zotcis Fusion is a competition between 10 apparel marketing and design students at K-State, described by the store's owner as a Manhattan "Project Runway."

After a runway show at the Kathouse Lounge at 8 p.m. Saturday, the top three designers will receive scholarships and their pieces will be manufactured for sale at Zotcis during the 2008 holiday season.

Strothman-Meyer said the best aspect of running a shop in Aggieville is the ambiance and unpredictability of each day. She said she is dedicated to helping current K-State students in apparel marketing and design, not only through Zotcis Fusion. The store has provided internships to 30 students, and Strothman-Meyer said the store lends itself to teaching interns and giving them creative freedom to develop strong résumés and experiences.

"If I walked into the store one day and everything had been changed around, I would say 'more power to you, use your creativity,'" she said.

Banman said she supports Strothman-Meyer's vision. After working at Hollister in the mall, Banman said her job at Zotcis is far less stressful and the two clothing stores are simply on "two totally different ends."

Alex Pearman, freshman in pre-professional business administration, said she and other shoppers find shopping at the mall easier because of typically lower prices. Pearman, a former Kite's waitress, said it is the feeling and support from fellow shops that give Aggieville shops appeal.

Matt Castro | COLLEGIAN
Zotcis Attire, located in Aggieville, is a clothing boutique that offers an ever-changing selection. Zotcis has been in Aggieville for six years and continues to thrive among customers, old and new.

The family-feeling of Aggieville businesses rubs off on all shoppers. Strothman-Meyer said the biggest obstacle is letting people know such clothing stores even exist, but once people have experienced what Aggieville has to offer besides bars and dance clubs, they often come back.

For owners of Aggieville shops, giving back to Manhattan and K-State is important, Strothman-Meyer said.

FRIDAY FACTOID

Campus Creek Complex first opened as dorms

By Joe Vossen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

How old is the Campus Creek Complex north of Justin Hall?

The building known as the Campus Creek Complex originally opened in March 1949 as two houses for female students in the home economics program. The university catalog referred to the buildings as "home-management houses" for women enrolled in the household management class. One lodge was named for Ellen H. Richards, the first president of the American Home Economics Association. The other, a duplex, was named for past home economics faculty members Margaret Ahlborn and Ula Dow.

Cottages or homes for female students in the home economics division had existed for 30 years before the construction of those along Campus Creek Road. As early as 1917, professor of domestic science Margaret Haggart had called for "a practice house in which girls may do real housekeeping. Among the valuable lessons that may be learned are those that pertain to standards of living and to standards of food."

The first home-management house opened in 1918, and also bore the name Ellen H. Richards Lodge. Women lived in the home for six weeks and received three hours of credit. According to an April 4, 1930, article in the Home Economics News, the women were expected to run the home on a yearly income of $3,600.

Several home-management houses were constructed before the two in the Campus Creek Complex in 1949. Another cottage built in 1928 attempted to represent an $1,800 yearly income level. In 1937, a home-management house was founded for black females in the home economics program; it was located on Colorado Street south of campus.

Directors of the home economics program made every effort to educate women on the duties of domestic life, including motherhood. In a Feb. 15, 1922, article in the Kansas Industrialist, the school of home economics announced the arrival of a 20-day-old baby from an Oklahoma City orphanage to its home management cottage. The article stated the purpose of the legal adoption was a "means of giving girl students practical training in home making." The child was named David II (the first baby was adopted the previous semester) and was "the youngest child ever secured for such use at an American college."

Today the Campus Creek Complex houses the Galichia Institute for Gerontology and Family Studies, an early childhood laboratory, and a speech and hearing center.

Professor combats gender issues, enjoys interacting with undergraduates

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Programs like ADVANCE and GROW help encourage women interested in science, math and engineering disciplines to pursue occupations once dominated by men. However, these types of organizations were not always available at K-State. There was a time when a woman might enter a department as the sole female.

This was the case for Dee Takemoto, professor of biochemistry, and she changed that.

GENDER ISSUES

Before she started in the research line with the Department of Biochemistry in 1979, Takemoto got her Ph.D. and did post-doctoral work at schools on the East Coast.

She said there were few women getting their Ph.D.'s in a science field at the time, but many of them went to work on the East and West Coasts. When she attended school on the East Coast, there were several women faculty members who recently had been hired. But when she came to K-State, she was the first and only woman in the biochemistry department.

"When I came here, I don't want to say it was a step backwards, but it was like back in time," she said. "[K-State] had some catching up to do, and people were aware of that."

Takemoto met with the provost at the time, Jim Cochran, to enhance the recruitment and retention of women faculty on campus. With the help of the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, they created the first program for mentoring women and minorities in science, math and engineering fields.

"That was the first ever, like a pilot program," Takemoto said. "Now they're all over the United States, and we are real proud of that."

Takemoto said she has seen definite improvement in the representation of women in science on campus. She said the programs she helped create when she first came to K-State are still around and benefiting women.

"I think the women on this campus really feel a sense of having someone to reach out to," she said.

RESEARCHING TEACHER

Takemoto was awarded the Distinguished Graduate Faculty Award for 2007-08. The award is given to "those faculty who have distinguished themselves nationally and internationally for excellence in research and graduate education," according to the Graduate School's Web site.

Her research has included work about the eye and its proteins in the retina and identifying antioxidants in foods that prevent cancer.

Teaching is another one of Takemoto's passions. She received a minor in secondary education as an undergraduate and spent a year teaching high-school biology before going to graduate school. Now she enjoys interacting with undergraduates at K-State.

"It's fun dealing with them," Takemoto said. "That's the point in their life that they have their whole life ahead of them; they're very positive, and they're fun to be with. It's fun to watch them go off to professional schools, and it's fun watching them now. They've come full circle."

Besides being an undergraduate adviser, Takemoto also teaches an undergraduate course, Biochemistry in Society. She teaches the course with another biochemistry professor, John Tomich. The two recently restructured and wrote the book and lab book for the class.

"It's funny because you think that if you are a professor, you only teach upper-level courses, but in our department we do it differently," she said. "It's very easy to teach an upper-level course–it's just a content component and not really as much teaching skill."

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Dee Takemoto, professor of biochemistry, works in her lab. Takemoto received the Distinguished Graduate Faculty Award for the 2007-08 school year, but says she actually enjoys teaching and advising undergraduates the most.

A BALANCING ACT

Takemoto balances her research time with her teaching, but she also balances her work and home life. Her husband is a distinguished professor of biology, and the Takemotos have two daughters.

With two scientists in the family, Takemoto said it was difficult for them both to find a job at the same university, but they were fortunate when they found K-State. She said finding a balance between work and home is important, and she has given talks to women scientists about the issue.

She said some key components to the balancing act are splitting up duties at home, having good childcare and not having to commute far, which is why the Takemotos like Manhattan.

"That was a real plus in this town–we didn't have to drive very far," she said. "It's much easier in a smaller town. It's safer so you don't worry about your kids. It's a family-friendly town in that aspect."

Though she and her husband enjoy Manhattan, they stay true to their home in California where they both have family. They own a home there and visit for holidays and other occasions.

Someday, Takemoto said, they both will return to California for good, because "Californians are like salmon. They always go back to where they live."

"We have this joke because people have this odd view of California, like it's a different country," she said. "We say we have to go back there to maintain our culture and our language."

Takemoto has traveled across the world for research, and she occasionally finds time on her trips to hike, another hobby of hers. She would like to someday hike across England, following Hadrian's Wall in spurts and stopping at bed-and-breakfasts.

As for her involvement on campus, she plans to continue her research and make sure that it's continuously funded.

She said she also would like to improve the population's knowledge of science.

"There's a lot of interest in the United States on courses that reach out to people that are not in sciences to make the whole population more science-literate," Takemoto said. "I'd like to perhaps get involved with starting a program here at K-State, like a science in society [course]."

the center for almost 20 years and helped the center gain international recognition through his work. He has published a book on sensory analysis practices and published more than 100 articles in various sensory publications.

Even with his contributions to the university, Chambers said he never expected the university distinguished professor distinction.

"I don't think you ever expect awards like that," he said with a smile. "Those are things that come and they're wonderful. You might hope that you can aspire to that someday, but you don't expect to get it."

SUCCESS BY CHANCE

When T.G. Nagaraja, professor of diagnostic medicine and pathobiology, was a graduate student in his home country of India, he was given a task to study something he, and almost everyone else in India, knew nothing about – rumen bacteria. Rumen bacteria live in the stomach of cattle and help with digestion.

NAGARAJA

"I had absolutely no knowledge of rumen," he said. "I didn't even know they are the bacteria that live without oxygen, which is the basic information that someone should have."

In 1980, Nagaraja came to K-State from India after graduate school to work with a professor who was studying rumen bacteria, and he has been here since.

Though he said he had trouble adjusting to the colder weather and being thousands of miles away from his family, Nagaraja said he stayed because of the research capabilities.

"I would have never been able to do this in India," he said.

Much of Nagaraja's work focuses on diseases that rumen bacteria can cause. These include acidosis, too much acid production; bloating; and liver abscess, in which rumen travel to the liver, causing significant growths on the organ.

He said many of the problems have been caused by the popularity of feeding cattle grain instead of the traditional grass, especially liver abscesses.

"If you go to slaughterhouses and look at livers, approximately 15, 20, 25 percent of animals have this, and that's because of grain feeding and the rumen travels to the liver," he said.

He said he designed a vaccine to lesson the chance of these abscesses and has received four patents for his invention.

Nagaraja has also started researching E. coli bacteria in cattle. E. coli bacteria is beneficial to cattle and excreted through feces. It has received media attention often because of infected feces entering the beef at slaughterhouse. He said his main focus now is how to formulate concepts to minimize the effects of E. coli.

Though Nagaraja said he spends 70 percent of his time researching, the rest of the time he teaches rumen bacteria classes, which he said aren't offered at many other colleges. Eventually, he said he plans to offer an online distance class in rumen biology so people all over the U.S. and world can learn about the bacteria.

FROM MICE TO MEN

More than 28 million people in the United States suffer from hearing loss. Philine Wangemann, professor of anatomy and physiology, has worked for the past two decades to cure these losses in animals and humans.

Wangemann's research specifically focuses on structures in the inner ear and their influence on hearing loss.

WANGEMANN

"My laboratory is involved in this kind of translational research as well as in basic research aimed to gain a detailed understanding of how the inner ear works," she said.

She said she and her laboratory partners and students in the anatomy and physiology department test several animals, including mice, to understand why creatures lose hearing and also determine solutions for several hearing disorders and conditions.

Though her research is still focused on test animals, Wangemann said she hopes to translate her understandings of the inner ear to effective uses on humans.

Wangemann has only been a professor at K-State for 10 years, but she has received more than $4.7 million of funding for her research and has gained world recognition for contributions to the research field.

Even with these accolades, Wangemann said she is most proud of the recognition from the people with which she works most closely – graduate and veterinary medicine students and other faculty.

"The most important recognitions for me, however, are the smiles of appreciation that come from students in the classroom, people in the laboratory, from staff, from colleagues and from collaborators.

She said she is also proud of and surprised by her distinction as a distinguished professor.

do some events there. There'll probably be some middle-distance kids as well. Some of that may depend on what goes on at Drake."

Rovelto said at this time in the season, it is important for the Wildcats – especially the field and multi-event athletes – to get multiple attempts in a competition. A smaller meet, like the Nebraska Open, provides a better opportunity for the Wildcats to make the final in their respective events and get more competition.

Many of the Wildcats would struggle to qualify for a final at the Drake Relays, or would not qualify for the meet at all, because only a set number of athletes are accepted into each event, making it very competitive.

"The decathletes and heptathletes – they're not going to qualify for any individual events at Drake, because they don't have a single event that would get them into the meet," Rovelto said. "At Nebraska, they can do two or three events to prepare for combined event competition coming down the road. So, that's why it's a much, much better meet for them. If they go to Drake, they may just have an opportunity to do one event, but at Nebraska, they can do two or three events."

While the decathletes will compete in several events this weekend, they won't have a chance to compete in a full decathlon until the Big 12 Conference Outdoor Championships, which begin May 16 in Boulder, Colo.

GUNS | Issue not new

He also said the only reason people carry guns on campus is for self-defense purposes. He related carrying a gun to wearing a seat belt in that people wear seat belts in case of an emergency – he said it's the same with handguns. Willcott said students shouldn't worry about their peers having handguns on campus because they are already surrounded by Manhattan residents who carry concealed weapons every day.

"Just because they know it's now legal on campus, they think they will be freaked out," he said. "They just have to take it in strides and know that they're doing it all over in Manhattan and they just don't know it because it is a concealed handgun."

his second-consecutive appearance and Wood is making his sixth. Including appearances as an individual unaffiliated with the team, Wood has competed in every tournament this spring. Junior Robert Streb, K-State's third leading scorer this season, also will compete for the Wildcats. Despite struggling in his last action, Streb has had a strong season, including two top-five finishes.

The 2007-08 campaign has been one of the best ever for K-State. Under coach Tim Norris, now in his 11th season at K-State, the Wildcats have finished in the top-10 in all but one tournament. That span also includes eight top-five finishes, tying a school record set during the 2003-04 season.

With a scoring average of 293.36 strokes through their first 11 events, the team is also on pace to break the scoring record, also set by the 2003-04 squad, which averaged 294.73 strokes. This is the Wildcats' final regular season action.

'Grand Theft Auto IV' to release Tuesday; gamers anticipate challenge

BRANDON STEINERT

For those of you looking for a fresh challenge after playing your way through the "Grand Theft Auto" series, your newest video game contest will be available Tuesday, April 29.

"Grand Theft Auto IV" is the latest and greatest edition to the gaming series, and its updated graphics and features will not leave gamers disappointed.

A whole new atmosphere is introduced for the main character, Niko Bellic, who just reached Liberty City from Europe via boat. The stage is set with Bellic and his cousin starting out in debt and dragged into a criminal underworld. The story of "GTA IV" should hold its own, as each prior edition's story has in the past.

A new engine allows players to rebound rockets off the ground, along with a plethora of other special effects.

Of the new features, online multiplayer is probably at the top of most gamers wish lists. Gamers will be able to play with up to 15 of their buddies, toting whatever weapons the host chooses, whether it be knives or rocket launchers, according to Official Xbox Magazine.

"San Andreas" was popular for being the first game in the series to introduce multiplayer, but only two-player free roam. "GTA IV" will provide more than 10 objective-based multiplayer modes and, of course, good old deathmatch.

The multiplayer inclusion is such a big deal that OXM put "GTA IV" on its cover for two consecutive months. The first article described the physics and graphics, while the second focused only on the multiplayer feature.

Screen shots of multiplayer action were released on some Web sites, most of which were difficult to access because of high traffic from anxious gamers.

There is a cops and robbers multiplayer mode, as well as search-and-destroy and escape-style game types.

This writer is looking forward to the getaway-style game, called Hangman's NOOSE. NOOSE refers to the Liberty City special police force, which is equivalent to SWAT.

In this game, the player starts the cooperative mission with three friends surrounded by police. All four players have to make it to a specific destination alive while escorting a fifth computer-controlled ally.

Even without the inclusion of a deep multiplayer mode, "GTA IV" would stand out among the greatest single-player games released in 2007 and 2008 combined, as long as it lives up to the reputation its predecessors have set.

Two different packages will be available with the game's release. The standard package is just the game and its case, but the more expensive version comes with a duffle bag full of goodies, including the game's soundtrack and various other paraphernalia. If the music is anything like it was in the previous three games, it will be worth the extra $30.

'Mario Kart Wii' less-violent alternative to vulgar games

BRENDAN PRAEGER

For gamers who don't enjoy shooting prostitutes and firing rocket launchers at police helicopters, the release of "Grand Theft Auto IV" doesn't offer much excitement. Nintendo has come to the rescue with another triple-A title for the family-friendly Wii, to be released on Sunday.

"Mario Kart Wii," the sixth title in the series, should be a good fit for the Wii because of accessible game play and multiplayer action.

The game will feature 16 new tracks and 16 classic tracks, all of which will follow themes from previous Mario Kart games, with branching paths and shortcuts.

Unlike the wide range of characters in Nintendo's last spin-off, "Super Smash Brothers: Brawl," the characters here only come from the Mario and Donkey Kong games. That means lame racers like Baby Peach and Funky Kong will be hitting the tracks as well.

The game also features a new control scheme. The Wii Wheel, which is packaged with the game, will allow gamers to steer by simply turning the Wii remote. Other control options are supported as well, so users can find the setup that works best for them. The game also is the first in the series to feature motorcycles and tricks.

Like its predecessor on Nintendo DS, "Mario Kart Wii" also will feature online multiplayer. Sadly, Nintendo's friend codes and lack of voice chat will protect the delicate ears of children by neutering the game play for everyone else. If the game can avoid the awful matching system that made "Super Smash Brothers: Brawl" nearly unplayable online, it should still provide hours of homework avoidance.

JUST A NOTE

Aggieville stirs up childhood memories

ADRIANNE DEWEESE

Many students grow anxious for 21 candles on a birthday cake so they can spend every weekend in Aggieville. However, my first Aggieville experience took place at age 7.

On a fall afternoon in 1993, my Grandma Betty told me we were going to Aggieville. As a lifelong Wamego resident who spent more time in Manhattan than her hometown, I immediately envisioned Aggieville as another town outside of Manhattan – little did I know that the historic shopping district was only several blocks away. That afternoon, my grandmother and I went to an arts-and-crafts fair in the 'Ville, and she introduced me to one of my favorite stores to this day – The Dusty Bookshelf.

As a reading geek throughout my youth, I loved the smell of gently used books. I also loved how the bookstore had its own residential cats, a tradition that continues today. On that visit, I purchased a copy of "Charlotte's Web" with my grandmother.

Across the street, near Acme Gift's current location, the Children's Book Shop fascinated me with shelves of shiny new picture books. A shelf near the store's back held my childhood love – the "Baby-sitter's Club" series. I'd kneel at the shelf each month, flipping through the pages of the latest book in the series.

As I got older, my love for books was coupled with a love for classic jewelry. One of my best friends in high school clued me into Krystallos, which had cases of glitzy rings and earrings with funky clothing that I adored. In May 2003, a fire destroyed Krystallos at its location in the 700 block of North Manhattan Avenue. The shop relocated to Poyntz Avenue in 2004 and has since moved back to its home in Aggieville.

Since I turned 21 in December 2006, Aggieville has had a new meaning for me. Instead of drinking round after round most weekends, I have found a musical retreat. Though I never envisioned the Dusty Bookshelf as a venue for local artists, my mind quickly changed after I attended a winter concert in December. The shelves of books and the intimate setting provided the perfect and relaxing backdrop while combining my two loves – reading and music.

And while I admit that I like bar hopping with my friends on a nice evening, my heart is perfectly content with a rum and Coke at Kathouse Lounge or Auntie Mae's Parlor while I am deep in conversation or listening to local and regional musical artists.

For me, Aggieville is more than just alcohol, inebriated Saturday nights and cute boutique shops. Those several blocks represent more than 15 years of childhood memories.

Historic fraternity reclaims original house after nearly 80 years

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If walls could talk, there would be a tiny, moss-green house on Colorado Street that could tell some tales: Stories of rituals and brotherhood – even of a fire that nearly destroyed the humble roots of one of K-State's most historic black fraternities.

About 40 people gathered on Saturday afternoon in the Hemisphere room on the fifth floor of Hale Library to celebrate the dedication of the Phi Beta Sigma Delta Chapter House.

A PUZZLING PAST

K-State's Delta chapter, founded in 1917 by Charles I. Brown, was the first Phi Beta Sigma Chapter established west of the Mississippi River on a racially mixed campus, said Pat Patton, research specialist at Hale Library.

She also said the fraternity's original off-campus house, located at 1020 Colorado St., was last under Sigma ownership in the 1930s. The Delta Chapter's founders lived in the house from 1917 until the nationwide financial crisis of the Great Depression, when they lost ownership of the house. However, through the research efforts of several K-State archivists, Manhattan residents and fraternity members - both past and present – the house is back under the ownership of the K-State Sigmas.

Life-long Manhattan resident Don Slater said he had always known that was the location of the original Sigma house. He said he had noticed the numbers 1020 etched on the concrete steps of the front porch and immediately knew the house was something special.

"I called Pat, and I told her. But she didn't believe me," he said with an sly grin. "But I knew. I've lived here all my life, I know this town."

Patton said she had been researching the Sigmas' history and searching for the house, but after visiting the house several times and doing more follow-up research for requests of the fraternity's history, she was as convinced as Slater that it was the house she had been looking for.

"That whole time, I had been looking for a two-and-a-half story house, because that's how it was described," she said. "But then we learned the top story-and-a-half had been burned in a fire. So this whole time, it was right there."

Now, nearly 80 years later, the K-State Sigmas have bought the historic house from its previous owners and were proud to show it off on Saturday.

1st-time fire

Firearm experience new for columnist

SARAH BURFORD

"Whoa!"

I let out an involuntary yell as the rifle butt slammed into my shoulder. The men around me chuckled and continued to advise my shooting skills. It was my first experience at a firing range, and I didn't know the first thing about guns. To me, they were foreign objects, entirely too powerful and consequently, rather intimidating.

But my timidity lessened and my interest increased as the volunteers at the Fancy Creek Range instructed me on the basics of shooting.

The range is located at Fancy Creek State Park, between Olsburg and Randolph, Kan. Bill Webber, director of the Friends of Fancy Creek Range board, said everyone who works at the range is a volunteer. Bill Long, another volunteer at the range, said everyone working there is safety-certified by the NRA. They certainly acted like it.

The moment I stepped close to the range, Wes, another volunteer, insisted I put on ear and eye protection. From then on, every precaution was taken to ensure everyone's safety. Lines designated where observers could stand and there were "cease fires" and calls to shoot. Wes said the range runs through safety precautions even with practiced customers.

Since it was my first time shooting, I started at the rifle range, and later moved to pistols and revolvers. I first shot a bolt-action, .243 rifle, which had a good kick. Next, Wes suggested I shoot his lever-action rifle, which he said he uses to instruct beginners, children and smaller people because it is lighter and doesn't kick as much.

Wes said the range is open to people of all ages and skill levels.

"We go out of our way to not be in a good ol' boy club," he said. "It's a public range. Anybody who walks in gets to shoot."

He said the range caters to families. An annual membership to the range costs $75 and allows family members to come for free. The daily fee without a membership is $10 per person. Members can also join for $35 per year plus a $4 daily fee.

The Fancy Creek Range first opened in September 2002, according to its brochure. The range is open on the first and third weekends of the month, and the fourth Thursday of every month from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Wes said customers can shoot targets at 25-, 50-, and 100-meter distances.

I tried my hand at pistols in the shorter range. First, I shot a semi-automatic pistol, a .40 caliber Smith and Wesson, under the guidance of Brent Keltner, senior in social sciences and former firearms instructor. My hands were a bit shaky, and the gun kicked up quite a bit.

Students to present K-State's history today

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students today might consider it odd if they were dunked in water for not wearing overalls and a bandana. But during the 1920s and 1930s on "Rough Neck Day," that is exactly what happened.

History students will bring K-State's past into the present today with their semester-long research projects about the university's events, students and faculty members. The program features Advanced Seminar in History students under the instruction of Bonnie Lynn-Sherow, associate professor of history. The program will take place at 3:30 in the Big 12 Room at the K-State Student Union.

PRESENTATION DETAILS

Advanced Seminar in History; semester-long research projects about K-State's history
Time: 3:30 p.m.

Place: Big 12 Room, K-State Student Union

Rita Weltsch, senior in secondary education-modern languages and history, included K-State's "Rough Neck Day" in her project "Student Rebels in the 1920s." In her research from University Archives and Manuscripts and from Special Collections, Weltsch said she applied U.S. cultural changes in the 1920s to changes that occurred on college campuses.

These changes included shorter skirts and shorter hairstyles among women and more women attending college for academic majors other than home economics, Weltsch said. "The Brown Bull," a literary magazine published at K-State only during the 1920s, featured articles, pictures and jokes with topics like bootleggers and flappers, Weltsch said.

"It's about how students perceived their world and what they thought the future would be," Weltsch said. "Today, they could be considered really corny jokes, but I could see how back then they would be considered risqué."

Other presentation topics will include the GI Bill at K-State; Martin Luther King Jr.; K-State alumni; Kansas State Agricultural College during World War II; Aggieville; K-State baseball; and Mitsugi Ohno, a Japanese glassblower who worked at K-State from 1961-96.

Bill Gepford, senior in history and English, researched K-State's literary societies for his presentation. Gepford said he selected the topic after his initial research found a significant amount of information about literary societies, which Gepford found interesting as an English major.

Gepford said literary societies existed at K-State from the 1860s through World War II. The societies incorporated social clubs, musical involvement, leadership and learning about business, he said.

THIS WEEK

A look at events that took place during this week in history

TODAY 1945: BENITO MUSSOLINI IS EXECUTED

On this day in 1945, "Il Duce," Benito Mussolini, and his mistress, Clara Petacci, were shot by Italian partisans who had captured the couple as they attempted to flee to Switzerland.

The former dictator of Italy was established by his German allies as the figurehead of a puppet government in northern Italy during the German occupation toward the end of the war.

TUESDAY 1429: JOAN OF ARC RELIEVES ORLEANS

During the Hundred Years' War, the 17-year-old French peasant Joan of Arc led a French force in relieving the city of Orleans, besieged by the English since October.

At the age of 16, "voices" of Christian saints told Joan to aid Charles, the French dauphin, in gaining the French throne and expelling the English from France. Convinced of the validity of her divine mission, Charles furnished Joan with a small force of troops.

FRIDAY 1933: LOCH NESS MONSTER IS SIGHTED BY LOCAL COUPLE

Accounts of an aquatic beast living in Scotland's Loch Ness date back 1,500 years, the modern legend of the Loch Ness Monster was born when a sighting made local news on May 2, 1933. A local couple who claimed to have seen "an enormous animal rolling and plunging on the surface."

WEDNESDAY 1945: HITLER COMMITS SUICIDE

On this day, holed up in a bunker under his headquarters, Adolf Hitler committed suicide by swallowing a cyanide capsule and shooting himself in the head. Soon after, Germany unconditionally surrendered to the Allied forces, ending Hitler's dreams of a "1,000-year" Reich.

THURSDAY 1941: CITIZEN KANE PREMIERES

Orson Welles' landmark film, Citizen Kane, debuted on this day at the RKO Palace in New York. The opening followed months of acrimonious battles between Welles and media baron William Randolph Hearst, who struggled to suppress the film, which was generally interpreted as a psychological study of Hearst himself.

Welles was born in Kenosha, Wisc., and raised in Chicago.

Bar fight leaves 2 men injured

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two men were injured in a fight at Tubby's Bar and Grill, 1127 Moro St., at about 2 a.m. Friday.

Matthias Naas, 24, of Kansas City, Mo., was punched in the face by a suspect and suffered a laceration to the back of his head, according to a Riley County Police report. Omar Jamaleddin, 35, of Lee's Summit, Mo., was struck in the face and suffered a severe cut to the head, according to the report.

Jamaleddin and Naas were apparently associated with each other and had been arguing with two suspects inside Tubby's before the batteries occurred, according to the report.

First, Jamaleddin was injured when a suspect struck him in the head with a beer bottle inside the bar. Then Jamaleddin, Naas and the two suspects were ejected from the bar, according to the report, at which point Jamaleddin approached a Riley County Police officer. Jamaleddin's face was cut near the left eyebrow and he was bleeding profusely, according to the report.

Naas was punched in the face by a suspect which caused lacerations to the back of his head. The suspects fled the scene before the officer could identify them.

Naas was transported to a hospital by Riley County EMS, where he received staples to the back of his head.

There was no indication in the report that Jamaleddin was treated or transported. All victims and witnesses had been drinking, according to the report.

No arrests were made.

Faith in God, company of family help parents of soldier cope

By Rebecca Perez

Tom and Karen Wall said goodbye to their son Craige Wall in August 2007. The goodbye wasn't permanent, but it could have been. Craige was deployed to Iraq a few weeks after visiting his parents.

Tom said it would have been harder if his son was leaving home for the first time, but Craige had left home years before.

Craige has a wife and two daughters, so while he and his father are close, there wasn't the emotion of a first goodbye.

"It was okay until he left to go to the airport," Karen said.

For both Karen and Tom, knowing Craige is in a relatively safe place has brought comfort. Despite knowing Craige's job as a helicopter mechanic keeps him out of harm's way, Karen still prefers to keep her news consumption down.

"I don't think the news is unbiased," Karen said. "I like to think that we are over there for a reason, and the news doesn't portray that."

Tom, who retired from the Air Force and now works on a navy base, said he hears stories of the good being done over in Iraq that is never reported.

The best source of news for the Walls is their daughter in-law, Tara.

Tara chose to leave the Ft. Riley area to go to her home in San Diego, Calif., when her husband deployed. Craige's parents have been able to see Tara and their grandchildren because Tara returned.

"Because of Craige's deployment, we have gotten to have a better relationship with Tara and the girls," Karen said.

Tom agreed.

"I've gotten to interact with my grandkids for almost a year," he said. "I wouldn't trade that for almost anything."

Though Tom said he loves Tara and his grandkids, the situation is bittersweet.

"Seeing Craige's family without him is one of the hardest parts of him being deployed," Tom said.

Both Tom and Karen said they gain comfort from the presence of family and their faith.

Tom attributes his ability to deal with the situation to a higher being.

"It's totally the grace of God," he said

Tom's advice to parents of soldiers deployed to war zones is to offer up their fears to God.

"It's such a relief to give it to God," he said.

Karen's advice centers on finding people with whom to share your fears and happiness with.

"Keep family strong and connected. Deployments are only for a time, but not forever, so try not to be isolated. I think we tend to be more negative if we are isolated," Karen said.

The Walls said they are proud of their son. They said they thank God for the time they've had with their grandkids and daughter in-law and that their son is safe so far. His family said they look forward to his return in November or December.

The freedom of choice

Liberals feel torn between important environmental, property-rights issues

OWEN KENNEDY

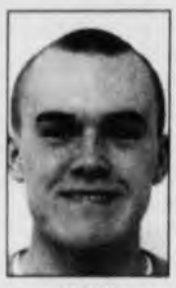
These are tough times. The economy is down, the world hates us and our next president might be the craziest of all psycho chicks. But it is even tougher being a liberal.

Those on the left have had to deal with accusations of anti-Americanism, Communism and any other ism the right believes is the new buzz word. It is hard to understand why anyone would oppose an ideology that supports public education, humanity, tolerance and equal opportunities for all Americans. But one of the most difficult positions we bleeding hearts have to deal with is our support for leaving our planet in the same or better shape then the way we found it.

Progressives like Theodore Roosevelt, Al Gore and Ladybird Johnson made it a goal to ensure that the beauty of our country and our planet are preserved. The environmental movement isn't new, and it will never become old, since the appeal of sustaining the only planet we have is significant.

But we on the left, especially young liberals, have to deal with positions that contradict each other. Not only do we want to preserve our environment, but we also support the rights of individuals. This is why we supported the Civil Rights movement and why we so strongly defend the freedoms of religions and sexual orientations. But as the progressive movement has evolved, we have become very strict on our defense of property rights. While both environmentalism and property rights are pillars of political positions, they don't mix well together.

In the 1960s, Barry Goldwater opposed the Civil Rights act of 1964 – not because he was a bigot, which he wasn't, but because the legislation made it illegal for a business owner to refuse someone service based on the color of their skin. This reasoning might be ignorant and misguided, but Goldwater believed that every American, even racist, had the right to do what they wanted on property that they owned. It is hard to agree with Goldwater, since the Civil Rights movement made the United States one of the fairest and accepting countries in the world, but he made a good point.



Liberty is not just a word we repeat every time we say the Pledge of Allegiance. Liberty is the right of every man, woman and child to govern their lives as they, and they alone, choose. Political philosophers and thinkers have written about the importance of liberty for hundreds of years – thanks, John Locke. And property rights are an essential part of liberty, but how can we support property rights, while at the same time preserving endangered species and the health of our planet?

Of course, without a planet we could not establish a country on liberty, but without liberty we could not choose to be part of the environmental movement. Perhaps there is a balance between the two, but who is willing to give up liberty and/or planetary beauty? As a young person, I have the luxury of choosing not to side with one belief over another. As I get older, I am sure I will figure out which position to take, but it will be no time soon. Liberty is essential, and so is a planet. If you think you can pursue someone to support one and not the other, you are a better orator than I.

Either way, being a liberal will always have its hardships, but it is still better than the alternative. Give me Al Franken over Bill O'Reilly any day.

Higher education vital for succeeding in United States

BLAKE OSBORN

Every 26 seconds a teenager in the United States drops out of high school, according to a column from the Tuesday issue of The New York Times. However, according to the the U.S. Census Bureau's Web site, "85 percent of adults age 25 and over have completed at least a high-school degree."

The first time I heard these statistics, I was shocked. If America is supposed to straighten out its faltering economy and take care of the environment, how can it do so with an uneducated populace?

The implications of this statistic dig deep into the education crisis in America, where attaining higher-level education is vital in today's competitive world. Apparently, one-third of all American students fail to attain a highschool diploma, meaning that only about two-thirds of all teenagers are viable candidates for a college education.

Allan Golston, president of U.S. programs for the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, admitted in the article that this reality scares him.

"We have one of the highest dropout rates in the industrialized world," Golston said. "By the 12th grade, U. S. students are scoring generally near the bottom of all industrialized countries."

The article goes on to say, "We've got work to do." I would have to agree. Education is the foundation of our country, and if it is being abandoned by our youth, then our future is not too hopeful.

In a report from the Educational Testing Service titled "America's Perfect Storm," three potent forces that are changing the landscape of America's future were listed:

First, the disparity in literacy and math skills between the school-age and adult populations. Second, the "seismic changes" rocking the U. S. economy resulting from the forces of globalization. And third, the intense demographic changes from immigration.

These three elements are combining to cause roughly only 66 percent of our students to graduate from high school.

Today, as observed in The New York Times article, having a college education is vital to attaining a middle-class lifestyle.

Teenagers who drop out of high school are "twice as likely to be jobless as graduates, three times more likely to live in poverty, and eight times more likely to be jailed," according to the Christian Science Monitor on Friday. Thus, college is no longer an optional rite of passage like it was 50 years ago. Today it is essential for being a viable candidate in the real world.

Bill Gates, who founded Microsoft, described today's high schools as obsolete in the New York Times column.

"By obsolete, I mean our high schools – even when they're working as designed – cannot teach all our students what they need to know today."

Moreover, high schools cannot teach kids anything when they are not even in the classroom. Twenty-five years ago this month, the National Commission on Excellence in Education released a significant report titled "A Nation At Risk." It called for reform in America's education, pointing out the academic under-achievements on national and international levels.

But we should not be content with the way things are. History is not kind to idlers. Education is something worth fighting for, and we need to keep up if we are to continue to prosper as a nation.

HIT | JORDY GOT DRAFTED

Congrats to Jordy Nelson for getting drafted by the Green Bay Packers. Don't forget your Wildcat background when you're famous.

MISS | "DEAD WEEK"

Dead week used to be test, homework and project free, and students had Friday classes canceled to prepare for finals. Now dead week is packed with assignments and early exams, which makes it just as stressful as the actual finals week.

HIT | MAE'S DAYS

Mae's Days took place this weekend at Auntie Mae's. It was a great opportunity for students and the community to hear some local music.

HIT | END-OF-YEAR BANQUETS

With the end of the semester approaching, many organizations and departments are putting on end-of-the banquets. This is a ideal chance for students to take advantage of the free food.

MISS | LAZY STUDENTS

Spring is finally decent, yet there are students too lazy to walk. The weather will only be nice for a few more weeks before the sweltering summer heat will arrive.

HIT | SUMMER IS ALMOST HERE

It's a good feeling to only have one week of school, one dead week and finals week to survive through. At least now we can see the light at the end of the tunnel.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

SCCC should be balanced

Editor,

The meeting held Thursday on the Students for Concealed Carry on Campus was hardly a debate. Arguing for SCCC were two highly qualified individuals with extensive experience speaking on the issue, and arguing against them was a student who admitted he knew very little about the subject (and who I was told only participated for a class) and an ambivalent city councilman who said he could see himself on the other side.

Secondly, audience members were asked to submit questions during the break. But after the third question, an audience member asked to interject and was allowed to do so. Allowing audience members to speak at random also undermines the legitimacy of the debate. But the worst problem, and the reason I left, was what this particular audience member said. The question was about the difficulty of identifying the 'real' killer if other students were armed and firing. The man's answer was basically, "If you have a classroom full of students that look like you and you and you, and then a guy in a black trench coat with an AK-47 comes in, you'll know who the killer is."

This type of view is uninformed and egocentric – especially since the Virginia Tech shooter didn't look anything like the Columbine students (the stereotype this man was referring to). When this kind of ignorance and narrow-mindedness is allowed to be spouted, it's not a debate – it's propaganda. Next time, I urge SCCC to host a balanced, informative debate.

New Mayor Hatesohl faces pressures from smoking ban, other issues

By Mark Savoy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan Mayor Mark Hatesohl is sworn in. Hatesohl said he wants Manhattan to be a community in which people have concern for each other.

Manhattan Mayor Mark Hatesohl said he believes in small government, Paul Harvey and that Manhattan can be a city in which people live together with love and concern for their neighbor. However, Hatesohl said he might not feel as much love as he would like to at this point.

He entered his one-year term as mayor with SGA pressuring the city commission to ban smoking in public areas in Manhattan, a city engulfed in a lawsuit stalling retail development in the north end and a city questioning the worth of the proposed Discovery Center addition to the south end.

During his inaugural speech, Hatesohl addressed calls for a public-smoking ban. He said he will not prohibit smoking in public places during his term.

"I've heard about the Student Senate; the Student Senate needs to organize people sometime and do a march through Aggieville and say 'we're not coming back 'til it's smoke free'," he said. "I'm not saying boycott business, I'm just saying [business owners] aren't getting the message."

Instead of passing a smoking ban, Hatesohl has spoken to restaurant and bar owners encouraging them to go smoke-free. Hatesohl said if ban advocates bring a strong petition to the city commission, they would probably move to put it on the November ballot. Hatesohl said his primary concern is the effect the ban would have on businesses in the area.

Brett Allred, owner of Tank's Tavern in Aggievelle, said he is impartial to the notion of a smoking ban.

"I don't think we'd miss a beat," he said. "I think smokers might go to bars that have patios, but I don't think the majority of our customers smoke."

Allred might be unstirred about the matter, but some students at K-State shared opinions on the issue.

"It's wrong," said Tendayi Moyo, junior in urban planning. "You shouldn't be able to smoke [in public]. Passive smoking is really dangerous, and you don't have a choice if someone else is smoking. If you want to smoke, you should do it in private."

As mayor, Hatesohl is faced with other challenges as well. A lawsuit against Dial Reality has stalled redevelopment in the north end, he said.

"My understanding is that the lawsuit is an attempt to overturn the rezoning that allowed the Hy-Vee store to become bigger than was originally planed for the space," Hatesohl said.

Hatesohl said he is encouraging plaintiffs to review downtown redevelopment and drop the lawsuit against Dial Reality.

Hatesohl said he is also aware of criticism surrounding the proposed Discovery Center, a museum that will be built in the south end.

"Most museums lose money," he said. "Very few can stay open without a subsidy from someone. Some people are concerned that it will become a financial drain on the citizens."

Even with opposition, Hatesohl said he believes the Discovery Center will benefit Manhattan. If successful, it will bring tourists into the area, increasing sales in the greater Manhattan area.

Former K-State wide receiver Jordy Nelson breaks a tackle from Texas cornerback Brandon Foster during the 2007 game Sept. 28. Nelson was the fifth pick selected in the second round of the NFL Draft Saturday.

Nelson 2th-round draft pick for Green Bay Packers

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Former K-State wide receiver Jordy Nelson believed his name would be called sometime during the second round in the NFL draft on Saturday.

But when no receivers went in the first round and Donnie Avery, a receiver from Houston who was not listed by scouts as a top receiver, was the first player at the position to be taken with the St. Louis Rams second pick of the second round, Nelson admits he was thrown off guard.

"You didn't hear a lot about him compared to all the others," Nelson said. "We also thought, well obviously, they aren't going down the list of where everyone is projected, so there might be a possibility for me to jump some people. It was a little confusing, but you just try to sit and wait."

Shortly after the Washington Redskins made Michigan State's Devin Thomas the second receiver picked with the third pick of the round, the Green Bay Packers came in at the fifth pick. Nelson said Packers officials gave him a call to let him know he would be their pick.

"I just received a phone call a little bit before the pick came up, so I knew before it came on TV," Nelson said. "I talked to quite a few people, they just said it was Green Bay and they were going to select me at that pick and they kind of passed the phone around the room and I talked to the head coach, wide receiver coach, and some other guys and they were just saying congratulations and they were glad I was a Packer."

> "I really like [Green Bay]. I think it will be a great place for my wife and I to move and live for a few years. They got great history, great organization, a great community around the organization that just loves their football team.
> Jordy Nelson
> FORMER K-STATE WIDE RECEIVER

Packers General Manager Ted Thompson said in a press conference shortly after the pick Saturday that he had initially spoken with Nelson at the NFL combine and was impressed with the receiver. Thompson identified Nelson as one of three or four players they wanted to draft at that time.

"The more you watch of him, the more you like him," Thompson said.

Green Bay head coach Mike McCarthy said during the press conference Nelson fits in perfectly with the offensive system and could benefit the special teams.

"If you watch our receivers the last two years, the production that we've been able to obtain in our three-step and five-step passing game; he's a perfect fit," McCarthy said. "Also his body type, and I think he'll be an excellent contributor on special teams."

Nelson said he was happy with the pick and the location, a place he thought was good for he and his wife to move to for a few years. He also said he likes the history of the organization and the community support from the fans.

The Packers had three picks in the second round, one of which they used on former Louisville quarterback Brian Brohm. Nelson said being drafted by a team makes the rest of the draft more interesting as he follows the rest of the Packers' picks.

Nelson will leave for Green Bay Thursday for this weekend's rookie mini-camps and return to K-State until graduation before returning to Green Bay again. Nelson said he hopes to learn from the receivers Green Bay already has.

"They have a great corps of receivers," Nelson said. "They got Donald Driver who is a great veteran and has been one of the top receivers lately, so hopefully I can learn from those guys and be able to fit in."

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Longhorns end Cats' season with 4-0 match

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Once again, the Texas Longhorns proved to be too much for the K-State women's tennis team.

The second-seeded and No. 20-ranked Longhorns defeated the Wildcats, 4-0, Friday in College Station, Texas. Coach Steve Bietau said the growth has been a work in progress.

"I really wondered when we could start putting things together," he said. "You always hoped it would be sooner. But the last three weeks the team has showed a lot of growth and progress; they were playing their best at the end. Vivi [Yrureta] and a couple of freshmen had great seasons. When you're 10th in conference, you want to do better. I was happy about our performance in the conference tournament and progress that was made in the last month."

For the third time in four seasons, the Wildcats advanced to the Big 12 Conference tournament quarterfinals. The Wildcats defeated Nebraska, 4-3 on Thursday, to advance.

The match against the Longhorns had its tempo determined quickly. At No. 1 doubles, the Intercollegiate Tennis Association's No. 28-ranked doubles team of Vanja Corovic and Marija Milic defeated senior Olga Klímova and junior Katerina Kudlackova, 8-2. Texas' No. 2 duo of Stephanie Davison and Caroline Larsson followed that up with an 8-5 victory over freshmen Vanessa Cottin and Antea Huljev. Since Texas had already captured the doubles point, the No. 3 doubles match of Maggie Mello and Courtney Zauft against sophomore Natasha Vieira and senior Viviana Yrureta was not finished.

"We were just short of what we needed to be," Bietau said. "I expected a stronger, more focused effort from Texas than the first time and it was the case. We played well, but Texas was better."

Singles play proved to be a continuation of the doubles efforts for each team. Sarah Lancaster quickly dispatched freshman Pauline Guemas at No. 6 singles, 6-3, 6-1. Davison then defeated

K-State falls flat, only winning 1

Coming off a big victory against the University of California at Irvine, K-State was faced up against No. 25 ranked University of Texas. The Wildcats (20-23, 6-12 Big 12 Conference) were able to make history, but only took one of three against the Longhorns.

FRIDAY: K-STATE 5, TEXAS 6

Texas (26-18, 10-11 Big 12) gave up two runs and had an error in the bottom of the ninth inning, but still held off K-State for a 6-5 victory.

The story for the Wildcats was missed opportunities. They stranded 10 runners on base – four were on third base.

K-State's best opportunity might have been in the first when it didn't record a hit, but still scored two runs. The Longhorns' starting pitcher, Chance Ruffin, walked two Wildcats and hit three Wildcat batters. With the bases loaded and two outs, senior catcher Rob Vaughn hit a flyball out to left field.

"I think I counted five other innings with runners second and third or whatever, and we just don't get that key hit to turn the pressure back around on them a little bit," said coach Brad Hill.

Another issue for K-State was starting pitcher Justin Murray. The junior only went three and two-thirds innings while giving up four runs, putting a lot of pressure on the bullpen. In came freshman Thomas Rooke, who pitched three and a third scoreless innings.

"He's done a really nice job for us," Hill said of Nelson's situation similar to Sproles'

JUSTIN NUTTER

While there's no doubt the 2008 NFL Draft, which took place over the weekend, was entertaining, something occurred early in the second round that left many football fans scratching their heads.

"With the fifth pick in the second round of the 2008 NFL Draft, the Green Bay Packers select Jordy Nelson: wide receiver, Kansas State."

As soon as I heard that K-State's All-American was headed to Green Bay, I had a flashback of the 2005 draft, when former Wildcat Darren Sproles was taken by the San Diego Chargers in the fourth round. Sproles, like Nelson, was picked up by a team that was already fully stocked at his position.

Unfortunately, that meant Sproles spent much of his career's first three years in the shadows of fellow tailbacks LaDanian Tomlinson and Michael Turner. He never saw any significant playing time at his position. However, an injury sidelined Tomlinson during the 2007 playoffs and gave Sproles his chance, and Turner left San Diego at the end of the season. That leaves Sproles as Tomlinson's primary backup.

Take a look at the Packers' depth chart, and you'll find that Nelson is in a very similar situation. Don't expect to see him playing much offense, as the Packers top three receivers from last season, Donald Driver, Greg Jennings and James Jones, as well as tight end Donald Lee, are all returning. With four proven sets of hands already on the roster, there doesn't appear to be room for another receiver. Like Sproles, it will probably take an injury or an off-season move for Nelson to see significant playing time in the immediate future.

Because Nelson was drafted so early, it's hard to question other NFL teams for not drafting him. ESPN projected him as a late-second round pick, and there were many undrafted receivers that were believed to be more talented. Many teams, including the Kansas City Chiefs, were in need of a solid receiver and would have been a much better fit for Nelson, but it's doubtful that anyone thought he'd be drafted so soon.

My speculation is the Packers were looking for a return specialist, a job Nelson excelled at during his senior season. If that's the case, then it would be one more similarity to Sproles, who has emerged as a solid kick/punt returner for the Chargers.

Whether he's used as a return specialist or not, it appears that Nelson's NFL career will begin the same way that Sproles' did. Barring an unexpected injury or departure, he'll likely spend his early years on special teams. While this might not seem too appealing, hopefully it will motivate him to do what Sproles did as well.

Give 110 percent, make the most of your chances and wait for your big break.

K-State's late surge finishes them in 8th place at Big 12 Championship

By Cole Manbeck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team ended its season on Sunday at the Big 12 Championship with an eighth-place finish at Karsten Creek Golf Course in Stillwater, Okla.

The Wildcats entered the last round of the tournament on Sunday in 10th place, but fired a 42-over par 330, which was good enough to jump ahead of Kansas and Iowa State in the final standings. Overall, the Wildcats shot a 125-over par 989.

Coach Kristi Knight said she was very proud of the way her team battled on Sunday.

"We played a lot of good golf [Sunday]," she said. "We struggled on the tournament front nine and lost some shots, which was the case for us for much of the tournament."

The Wildcats' effort was highlighted by senior Michelle Regan. Playing in her final collegiate tournament, Regan shot a 24-over par 240, placing her in a tie for 15th place, marking her fifth top-20 finish of the season and her first at the Big 12 Championship during her four-year career at K-State.

Freshman Elise Houtz came close to her first top-20 finish in her young career, carding a 30-over par 246 for a tie for 27th.

"I am proud of Michelle, she played a lot of good golf," Knight said. "Elise had a really solid tournament for her first Big 12 tournament and it will really help her as a player in the future. It's a really important experience for her and it should give her a lot to build on for next season."

Oklahoma State, playing on its home golf course, captured its sixth tournament championship in the 12-year existence of the conference with a 48-over par 912. Coach Knight said the difficulty of the golf course played a big factor in the high scores.

"You can't really appreciate the difficulty of this golf course," she said. "The greens are very fast and they are the fastest greens we have played all year. They are very difficult and it's important to stay below the hole. We made some mistakes out there and we paid for them. It was a good experience for everyone – playing on such a difficult but fair course."

The weekend was the end to what began as a very promising season for Knight's squad. The Wildcats carded four top-three finishes during the fall season, but were never able to get things on track during the spring schedule.

"We had a nice fall and we were in a position to make a good run this spring," Knight said. "We played a very competitive schedule which gave us a good opportunity, but we just didn't have a good spring and there are no excuses."

Knight said she was proud of her seniors and the work they put in during their careers.

"It's time to move on and it's time for the younger players to start to think about the future," she said.

TRACK AND FIELD

Wildcats take 3 top finishes at Drake

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At the 99th-annual Drake Relays, in Des Moines, Iowa, the track and field team captured three top-three finishes and a fifth-place finish.

Sophomore pole-vaulter Alexandra Gonzales secured the Wildcats' highest finish at the four-day meet, when she took second in the women's pole vault on Friday. She cleared the bar at 12-07.50, which tied her previous personal-best, and earned a regional qualifying mark.

The Wildcats earned another top-three finish on Friday, when the women's distance medley relay finished in third place. The squad of seniors Donniece Parrish and Morgan Bonds, junior Lilliani Mendez, and sophomore Beverly Ramos recorded a time of 11:36.19, which is the fifth-best finish in K-State history.

Saturday, junior Mike Myer recorded the Wildcats' third top-three finish when he completed the 100-meter dash in a time of 10.47. Myer's bronze finish comes a week after winning the 100-meter dash at the prestigious Kansas Relays, and marks the third time this season he has finished in the top-three.

Myer held second place after the preliminaries on Friday, after racing to a time of 10.43, but fell one spot in Saturday's final. Myer's preliminary time marked the sixth time this season he has earned a regional qualifying mark.

Last year's outdoor national champion high jumper, junior Scott Sellers, tied for fifth in the high jump, clearing the bar at 7-2.50. The junior was one of five competitors to finish at that height. Nebraska's Dusty Jonas, who has battled with Sellers several times this year, won the event with a jump of 7-6.50. Sellers topped Jonas to win the Big 12 Conference Indoor title, while Jonas beat Sellers to win the NCAA Indoor Championships.

The Wildcats 14 athletes to the Nebraska Open on Sunday, in Lincoln, Neb., and took four event titles.

Freshman Tiara Walpool took the title in the women's triple jump, skipping a distance of 40-05. Freshman LaKeisha Herring took fourth in the event, with a distance of 38-07.75.

Senior Marnyka Honeycutt and Walpool finished first and second, respectively, in the women's 100-meter dash. Honeycutt clocked a time of 11.93, while Walpool finished in 12.35. Honeycutt also took the title in the 200-meter dash, with a time of 24.16.

Gonzales left the Drake Relays after competing on Friday, and traveled to Lincoln to compete her second pole vault competition of the weekend. She cleared a height of 12-01.50 to take the title in Lincoln.

Sophomore Danny Schneider took the title in the men's 1500-meter run, recording a time of 3:57.69, while junior Emily Dittemore took second in the women's 1,500-meter run, finishing in a time of 4:39.03.

Next weekend, the Wildcats will split and have athletes compete in two different events. Some will stay at home and compete in the Ward Haylett Invitational at the R.V Christian Track, and some will travel to Palo Alto, Calif., for the Cardinal Invitational.

Men's golf caps off record-breaking season

By Justin Nutter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A team-low 297 in the final round propelled the K-State men's golf team to an eighth-place finish in the Big 12 Championship Sunday in Trinity, Texas.

After the tournament, the Wildcats have a scoring average of 294.14 strokes per hole, which breaks the K-State single-season record. The record was previously held by the 2003-04 squad, which averaged 294.73 strokes. With a second-place finish in their last tournament, the Wildcats also tied the single-season mark for top-five finishes with eight. That record was also set during the 2003-04 campaign. Coach Tim Norris credits the record-breaking season to his team's consistency.

"This is a very competitive group, and they played very consistently all season," Norris said. "We've had several good performances this year. It was a team effort."

The finish was the highest in a conference tournament for the Wildcats since finishing fourth during the 2004 campaign. K-State, who shot a 50-over par 1202, finished 61 strokes behind tournament champion Oklahoma State, who won the conference championship for the second consecutive year. Others finishing ahead of the Wildcats include Texas, Texas Tech, Texas A&M, Baylor, Kansas and Oklahoma.

The Wildcats were led by sophomore Joe Ida, who finished tied for 17th with a seven-over par 295, including a one-under par 71 in the first and last rounds. Sophomore Mitchell Gregson and junior Robert Streb both finished tied for 25th with identical scores of 11-over par 299.

Freshmen Kyle Smell and Daniel Wood, occupying the final spots of the lineup, struggled throughout the tournament. Smell's 26-over par 314 left him in a tie for 49th, and Wood finished tied for 59th with a 35-over par 323. Norris said he was pleased with the team's performance.

"We would like to have finished higher, but I thought we did pretty good overall," he said. "The play of Joe and Mitch was pretty consistent, but unfortunately, we didn't have much support."

Norris said a strong performance from the whole team is needed to succeed against such a talented field.

Because they finished the season with a record above .500, the Wildcats are eligible for post-season play. If they are chosen by the NCAA Selection Committee, which will announce its selections on May 5, it will be the team's first post-season appearance since 2006. Norris said even if they don't make the post-season, he's proud of the team's effort.

2 K-Staters named Udall Scholars

By Lacy Skinner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Udall Scholarship is a prestigious and competitive scholarship for students pursuing careers concerning environmental issues.

WILSON

LONG

This year, among the 80 chosen from 2,000 public and private institutions of higher education, two of the Udall scholars are from K-State: Iris Wilson and Nicholas Long.

The Morris K. Udall scholarship is a congressional scholarship that honors the former Arizona congressman for his legacy of public service, said James Hohenbary, K-State assistant dean for nationally competitive scholarships.

Eighty students were carefully selected nationwide to receive this tremendous honor. "Taking time to write a strong essay about Udall, having a strong resume, having three strong references and a strong academic record is critical," Hohenbary said.

"I'm honored to be a part of an elite group of students," Wilson, junior in geography, said. "My internship experiences since my first year at K-State, my essay and other research projects with my professors helped me stand out," she said.

According to a K-State Media Relations news release, K-State President Jon Wefeld said having two Udall scholars come from K-State greatly establishes the school as an institution for academic excellence.

"To have two K-State students named Udall scholars this year not only speaks highly of their qualifications, but also shows how well a K-State education prepares our students to succeed at the highest level, as well as the strength and commitment of our faculty to help K-State students achieve," he said in the news release.

Nicholas Long, senior in architectural engineering and Udall scholar, said he is very eager for the chance to get to talk with other Udall scholars.

"I'm very excited about it. I'm happy for the opportunity to go to Tucson, Ariz., and talk with the other winners about environmental issue," he said.

Long said his internships, encouragement and work with K-State professors helped him stand out from other students.

"I feel like my internship in Los Angeles about environmental issues, my experience at K-State with the professors in the engineering department was useful," he said.

Of the two students, Hohenbary said both students are committed to investing time and energy for the good of the environment.

"I'm definitely not going to slow down," Wilson said. "Receiving this award has given me confidence to not back down from a challenge."

Bosco Student Plaza still a free speech zone

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As summer draws nearer, the K-State Student Union is anticipating the anniversary of the construction of Bosco Student Plaza. However, few students realize that before 2000, the plaza was simply a two-lane street and was known as the Free Speech Zone – a designated area on campus for students to voice their opinions and beliefs.

The following article is from the October 19, 2000, Collegian, written by Maggie Blunk and accurately depicts the future of the Plaza.

Union Plaza still site of free speech

The area between the K-State Student Union and Seaton Hall now might be known as the Union Plaza, but it still remains the campus free-speech zone.

Loleta Sump, facilities support service manager, said the area has not been released to the state by the contractors. Consequently, she said she was unsure whether the rules of the "free speech" area would stay the same.

"In terms of policy and ground usage, that will stay the same," she said. "The change will be vehicles driving through."

Sump said there still will be an area for emergency vehicles to pass through, but regular vehicles no longer will have that luxury.

The majority of the users of the free speech area are registered students organizations, she said.

"Based on the requests I've gotten, I think the area will be used more," she said. "The feedback I've received is that it is large, it looks nice and it is nicely landscaped."

Besides taking reservations, Sump said she works closely with the Union.

"It's like a partnership," said Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union. "Loleta makes the reservations, and we set up the tables or whatever is needed."

Connaughton said there might be things that evolve in the future, but they are treating the area in the same way as it was before.

The brightly colored cement design and creative landscape has become an open place for student organizations to gather and students to meet.

"I think the area will gain more usage because there isn't a road there anymore," said Carla Jones, associate dean of student life. "I think it'll gain more pedestrian traffic, which is important for campus life."

Gayle Spencer, coordinator of student activities, said an area such as this is essential for the university.

"It's important for us to make this area exist," she said. "It's people's right to have an area that they can speak freely."

FIREARMS | Range offers class for women

But the next two I tried were a bit easier to handle. Wes let me shoot his Ruger .38 special, which was longer and didn't kick much, and then a smaller Smith and Wesson .38 special, both of which he had used on the police force years ago.

This is where I made a major shooting range faux pas: I described a gun as "cute." No matter what a girl thinks a gun looks like, she keep her comments to herself if they have anything to do with femininity. The look I got for that comment was priceless.

However, if you simply must use girly terms for guns, the Fancy Creek Range hosts an event called "Women on Target" twice a year (May 10 and August 23 of this year) where the range is open only to women.

Wes said about 30 to 40 K-State students come to the range on a nice weekend in the fall and spring. Fort Riley provides most of the customers during the summer. Wes said the Friends of Fancy Creek Range allows the K-State gun club to have meets at the range. The Friends of Fancy Creek Range are working on a building that will host a K-State class called wildlife and outdoor management, Wes said.

The range also has areas designated for archery. The Kansas chapter of the Wild Turkey Federation has its state shoot-off at the range, and 4-H clubs have some events there as well.

Overall, the range has a good variety of opportunities, and the safety range officers know what they are doing. I felt safe and comfortable shooting at Fancy Creek Range, and learned the basics about how to shoot several different firearms.

DEDICATION | Sigmas look to expand house

A SUPPORTIVE FAMILY

The dedication crowd ranged from life-long Manhattan residents to smiling toddlers unaware of the history their families and friends were sharing with them. Past and present members of the fraternity were also in attendance, along with other supportive Sigmas from around the state.

"We all know each other – I know [Sigma] brothers from all over. We're just here to support them; this is really important to them and all of us," said Dontae Payne, a Sigma. Payne is a 2006 graduate of Howard University in Washington D.C., where the first Phi Beta Sigma chapter was founded in 1914.

Payne wasn't the only Sigma to travel to Manhattan to support what he called his "family" of Sigmas. There were also fraternity members from Fort Riley, Topeka and Kansas City present at the dedication, said Henry Jackson, K-State's Delta Chapter adviser.

"All this support just shows the love and affinity the different Chapters have for one another," he said. "This is a very special day for our Chapter, and we appreciate the encouragement these brothers are providing for us."

The dedication began with a DVD presentation that displayed names, photographs and video clips of some of the original K-State Sigmas.

To wrap up the presentation, Patton read a heartfelt letter written by a daughter of one of the fraternity's original members and announced the launching of the new Web site for the fraternity. Many of the Sigmas and audience members who have been involved in the process of putting together the fraternity's history verbally credited Patton with spearheading the project. Several of the K-State Sigmas even jovially referred to her as their "house mom."

"For me, this was just a labor of love," Patton said. "There is just such a rich history here – it just needed to be uncovered."

HISTORY WITH A FUTURE

Following the presentation, the group made its way to 1020 Colorado St. to visit the historic site. The quaint, one-story house appeared tidy in its small plot, with swept sidewalks and a cleared backyard. The inside rooms are small, but the warm colors of the freshly painted walls adorned with Sigma-pride decorations invited guests in for a quick look around.

There are currently two Sigmas living in the tiny house, but the fraternity has high hopes of expanding the square footage to be able to house more members.

"We're thinking we could expand out to the sides six feet or so, and maybe backwards into the yard, even eventually build up a story," said Kyle Lockett, sophomore in digital art and one of the two Sigmas who live in the historic house. "We're going to send in some documentary footage to [Extreme Makeover: Home Edition] and see what they think about coming out here and helping us out. We could get 15, 20 more rooms for us to live in."

While the Sigmas still have much work left to do on their house, this marks the end of a project for others. Part of Patton's journey with the Sigmas and their historic house has come to a close, but she said it is still sometimes hard to believe the house is back in the hands of those who poured into it, so many decades ago.

"It was in August of 2006, and I remember Jonathan [Anderson, president of Delta chapter and senior in architecture] and I were standing on the front porch of the house and we thought 'Wouldn't it be great if the house could be back with the Delta Chapter?' We never dreamed it actually would be," she said.

HISTORY | Past K-State clubs to be presented

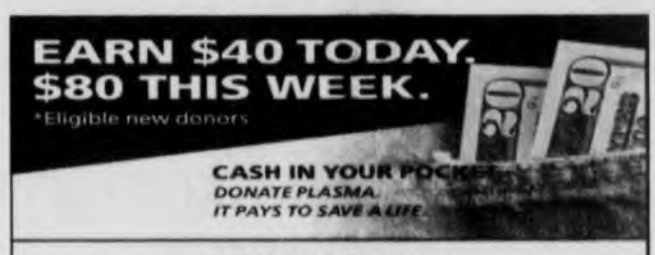
what seven or eight of our groups would today, so it was pretty cool," Gepford said.



The societies had names like the Bluemonts, the Alpha Betas, the Websters, the Hamiltons and the Brownings. The Bluemonts based their name on Bluemont Central College – K-State originally started on the grounds of Bluemont Central College, Gepford said. He also said the Brownings took their name from Elizabeth Barrett Browning, a Victoria era poet whose poetry the society members studied.

During the presentations, students and faculty can learn about the effects that events and organizations had on K-State, Gepford said.

"K-State is an amazing place, and you get to learn about the things that made it into the place it is today," he said.

Weltsch said students and faculty members might find K-State topics previously unknown to them as interesting and entertaining. She also said she enjoyed learning about rules that existed at K-State in decades past and how they seem absurd today.

"Personally, I think it's always important to learn about the history from where you're from; it defines who you are," Weltsch said. "Whether you are a true K-Stater or someone who just attends the school, it still plays a defining role in your life. If you're curious about anything, it's a good time to discover something new."

Kudlackova at No. 3 singles, 6-0, 6-1. The match was clinched when ITA's No. 59-ranked Corovic topped Yrureta, 6-2, 6-2. Huljev, Cottin and Vieira's matches were not finished.

"We just weren't strong enough to get the job done, most was credit to them," Bietau said.

The loss to the Longhorns ended the careers of Yrureta and Klimova. Yrureta capped her season with a 17-16 singles record. She defeated Nebraska's Imke Reimers, Thursday, 6-1, 2-6, 7-6 (10). Klimova, who has been frequently injured throughout her career, posted a 10-15 double mark with Kudlackova during the regular season. The duo avenged an earlier loss to Nebraska's No. 52-ranked Reimers and Jana Albers, by defeating them 8-5 Thursday.

A majority of the Wildcats line-up will return for the 2008-09 season. Huljev will look to improve upon a 16-17 singles mark. Vieira will enter the ranks of the veterans after posting a 10-22 singles record. All five returning Wildcats are letterwinners.

"The biggest thing was getting the culture and attitude turned around," he said. "We've made progress there. Having Katka [Kudlackova], a successful, quiet leader and the freshman making progress they've had, I'm optimistic. There will be plenty of questions with possibly four freshman and a new assistant coach, but with a core group we have I feel like we'll be in a good position."

Rooke. "Obviously, we don't like our starter coming out in the third, I guess didn't get through four innings for us."

K-State added a run in the third off a homerun by freshman Jason King, but Texas responded with four runs off of five hits in the top of the fourth, before adding one in the eighth and the ninth.

Ruffin took the victory for the Longhorns and Murray took the loss.

SATURDAY: K-STATE 4, TEXAS 1

It took more than 10 years, but K-State finally beat Texas at home 4-1 on Saturday. It was the first time since March 22, 1998, that the Wildcats beat the Longhorns in Manhattan.

"I didn't know that stat," said junior Byron Wiley. "I don't know, times change."

K-State earned the victory with an outstanding pitching performance by senior Brad Hutt and a timely hit by Wiley in the seventh. With K-State up 2-1 in the seventh, Wiley came up to bat to face Texas pitcher Brandon Belt. Wiley hit the fourth pitch up the middle, driving in two runs to put the game out of reach.

"I didn't get the hit off him yesterday, but kind of saw how he was pitching," Wiley said. "He kind of came in with middle-in fastball, and I just drove it back up the middle. Definitely happy to knock in those couple runs to give us more insurance to win the game."

Even though Texas has an outstanding offense, Hutt was up to the challenge by keeping the Longhorns to one run over eight innings of work. One of his biggest moments, according to Hill, was in the top of the sixth inning.

Texas had captured the momentum after getting a bases-loaded double play ending the Wildcat scoring threat in the bottom of the fifth. Hutt came out and retired the Texas lineup in four batters without giving up a run, keeping the game at 2-1.

K-State scored two runs in the second off of four hits. Texas scored its only run off of a fielder's choice in the third.

Hutt earned the victory, moving to 4-3 on the season and senior Daniel Edwards recorded the save for the Wildcats. It was his seventh of the season.

SUNDAY: K-STATE 4, TEXAS 7

After getting such good starting pitching on Saturday, K-State found it difficult to do two days in a row, as Texas scored four runs in the first to lead the Longhorns to a 7-4 victory.

The first batter of the game, Texas's Travis Tucker, found his way to first on a catcher's interference call, and the Longhorns followed it up with five hits – two of them doubles – against K-State's junior Lance Hoge. Hoge struck out David Hernandez to finally end the inning, but the damage was done.

"You just can't do that in the first inning," Hill said. "Our first inning our last three Sundays are just kind of a problem. Again, we are going to reevaluate what we are trying to do."

K-State tried to creep back into it by scoring one run in the first, third and fourth innings. After the fourth, though, K-State went three up and three down the next three innings. K-State added one in the eighth when senior Brett Scott scored off of a freshman Jason King single.

"Yeah, that really hurts," Hill said. "Just to get some pressure. We made a run at it in the eighth and ninth, but those innings need to be in the fifth, sixth and seventh."

In the seventh, Texas scored two more runs. Brandon Belt hit a double to left field to lead off the inning. He was driven in when pinch hitter Russell Moldenhauer hit a double down the line into left field. Runey Davis pinched ran for Moldenhauer and was driven in off a single by Kyle Lusson.

Hoge took the loss for the Wildcat and moved to 1-5 on the year. He hasn't been the same pitcher since his complete-game shutout of Oklahoma State on March 30.

Local music group works to replace canceled KonzaFest

By Whitney Hodgin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though the cancelation of the popular music festival KonzaFest might have left area music fans disappointed, the Manhattan Music Coalition members who organized the event have promised that the time saved, now will improve what services they can offer in the future.

MMC consists of a core group of music promoters and about 40 local bands. Together, they do what they can to facilitate support and promotion for independent, local and little-known bands in Manhattan.

"We didn't just form to put on music festivals," said Evan Tuttle, MMC member. "We got together to provide services and resources. We want to make sure music education never leaves Manhattan."

Tuttle is a core member of MMC and he said he tries to go to as many concerts as he can to show his support and encourage others to listen to new bands. He said MMC might pair with the Manhattan Area Arts and Humanities Coalition in the future to extend the organizations' outreach.

"We can tie all our resources together," he said. "And those resources are people and knowledge."

The MMC office is located inside Sisters of Sound, a record shop in Manhattan owned by Sarah and Leah Cunnick. Both sisters are heavily involved in the MMC and said they have dedicated their lives to supporting bands. Sarah said the MMC has monthly meetings to share information, plan events and refocus its efforts.

"Lately we've been focusing on specific aspects of MMC," Sarah said. "Just making sure everyone is on the same page. At the same time, we're helping other non-profits with their own events."

Sarah said she remembers a time when Manhattan's music scene faltered, and this motivates her to keep the current one alive.

"I've been working on this since 1990, when only friends and girlfriends or boyfriends of band members came to their shows," she said. "Cover bands were really popular because people assumed that if they hadn't heard of a band that it wasn't a good one.

"We want to make Manhattan the place to come to for music in Kansas, and for MMC to be an all-in-one resource center," Sarah said.

Booking bands and putting on festivals are specialties of the MMC, but it provides assistance for anyone lacking the knowledge they need to book a band for a wedding, or even to find a band to play in.

"We will go outside the box to get you what you want," Sarah said. "It's a learning process, and not everyone knows how to set up lighting or where to find the best sound systems in Manhattan."

Sarah said she wants to see more 18-and-older and all-age venues in Manhattan, and to dispel the stereotype that Aggieville is all-beer and nothing else. And because the KonzaFest was canceled this year, the MMC helped Auntie Mae's Parlor organize a similar event called "Mae's Days."

Owner Jeff Denney said he already had the weekend designated for KonzaFest, and took advantage of the free time to book bands. The MMC helped by making fliers, providing ticket information, and posting promotions on its MySpace.com page.

"Mae's Days went very well all around," Denney said. "The bands were wonderful, and it provided a lot of business."

The MMC helped Denney book 12 bands to play on Friday and Saturday nights.

The larger festivals will be returning, Tuttle said.

"AggieFest will be back with a vengeance in the fall," he said.

SEX IN THE CITY: THE LITTLE APPLE

Columnist: When it comes to sex, practice makes perfect

The old adage "practice makes perfect" is true on many levels. Shooting hoops to work on your basketball skills, belting out some scales to shape your voice and hitting the kitchen to become the next Rachael Ray. But what about when it comes to sex?

MATT COMBES

Sex has always represented one of the highest forms of beauty and art in human society, and though it should be respected for its inherent dangers, I feel an unjust stigma has been cast upon it.

Before diving into the sexual world, one should know his or her self extremely well. Though society has come a long way from holding the opinion that masturbation causes blindness and hairy palms – razor companies must have made a fortune – there is still a stigma associated with exploring your body's most intimate zones.

According to WebMD.com, 95 percent of males and 89 percent of females masturbate. It serves as a great way not only to relieve sexual tension, but also to basically learn what gets your motor running. In addition, it is not just for adolescent boys who stumble across their dad's Penthouse magazine collections.

Take a night and explore your body as you relax. Go beyond the clichés, and explore every inch of your flesh to find what spots tingle just right.

Of course masturbation only can take you so far. You learn a lot more from playing a little one-on-one than you do just shooting hoops. Abstinence is the only way to completely protect yourself from contracting a wide slew of sexually transmitted infections, but it is fairly unlikely you will have no sex whatsoever in your life– future priests, nuns, etc., excluded. For those saving themselves for marriage, I applaud you. However, according to the American Physiological society, the chances of actually making it to marriage are slim. "Sixty percent of college students, who had pledged virginity during their middle or high school years, had broken their vow to remain abstinent until marriage," according to the society. If you are one of the 40 percent who do save off until marriage, I have extreme respect for you. But honestly, I feel bad for your future spouse. Sex is a complex and intense dance, and for those of you who have seen a person trying to do "Soldier Boy" for the first time, you get my point.

In no way am I saying you should go at it like bunnies, but by figuring out first off what pleases and pleasures you, and then what can please others, can make for magical nights, mid-afternoons or mornings.

However, one must understand that you do put yourself at more risk when having more partners, and that you should still know your partner well and have a level of trust between you. In addition, you and your partner(s) should always use protection to be safer. And finally, as in any sexual relationship, there should be an open dialogue between you and your partner(s), if you can do the deed with them you should be able to talk openly with them.

CIA director to speak Wednesday in series

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

HAYDEN

Though members of almost all political arenas have dotted the list of Landon Lecture speakers for more than 40 years, Gen. Michael Hayden will be the first Central Intelligence Agency director to speak in the distinguished series.

Hayden will speak at 2:30 p.m. Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture Series, said he initiated contact with Hayden and invited him to K-State because he has been one of most influential political figures in the U.S. during the past several months.

"I'm very pleased to bring him here," Reagan said. "It continues our tradition of having top news-makers come to speak in our series."

Hayden has testified before Congress several times about whether some interrogation methods in Iraq are torture or not, especially waterboarding, which involves consistently pouring water on a person's face to imitate drowning. He has also testified about intelligence on North Korea's link with Syria's nuclear capabilities, Iran's possible threat of violence to the U.S. and other U.S. safety concerns. Hayden was also director of the National Security Agency from 1999-2005 and was responsible for regulating the controversial telephone surveillance program that many legislators and citizens have called an unlawful invasion

The Food Assistance Program now provides Vision cards — plastic debit cards — to eligible persons for use in purchasing food from local grocery stores.

Inflation creates need for food assistance from gov.

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

According to a projection made by the Congressional Budget Office, 28 million people will rely on federal food assistance in the United States by October.

This is a 26.5-percent increase from 2007 and will be the largest amount of people in the food assistance program since the program began in the 1960s.

"Our donations have decreased by 9 percent, and the need for food assistance has increased 19 percent," said Natascha Phillip, executive director of the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Phillip has been at Flint Hills for five years and said this has been the largest need for assistance since she has been with the organization.

The Flint Hills Breadbasket has been a prominent food assistance organization in the Manhattan community since 1982. The mission of the Flint Hills Breadbasket is to minimize hunger and poverty through the distribution of available food and to nurture projects that help alleviate hunger and poverty.

"It's really putting us in a bad position right now," she said. "We have to serve more people with less donations."

Phillip said the donations are not what they used to be. The organization has been trying to promote their fundraisers, including Project Manhattan, the annual golf tournament and holiday campaign, all in hopes to receive more donations.

"Everybody makes a difference," she said. "Even if it's something small, please bring it in because it makes a big difference."

Flint Hills is one of the few organizations that provide food assistance in the area. According to the Social and Rehabilitation Services Web site for the State of Kansas, there are certain eligibility requirements for people to receive food assistance through the SRS. Some requirements include having a job but still considered to have low income. Also, people who live and purchase food together, including students, are eligible to apply.

"Food prices have gone way up, partly because of world-wide demand and the ethanol problem," said Lloyd Thomas, economics professor.

Thomas said there are a number of reasons inflation occurs. The value of the U.S. dollar has decreased, which raises the cost of goods we purchase from other countries. Another major factor with the rise in inflation is the increase in oil prices, he said.

"We've had this huge increase in oil prices, which have doubled in the last year and a half," he said. "Oil is up to $115 a barrel, and a few years ago it was $30 a barrel."

Oil is used for various household products – not just for fuel, and the cost of oil prices have doubled in the last year and a half, Thomas explained. He suggested students try to car-pool and save as much money as possible, because inflation is going to continue increasing at least 5 to 6 percent in the next couple of years.

"The government now is so concerned with the housing crisis – the falling of houses' prices," Thomas said. "They are focused on preventing a depression so they are ignoring inflation."

Compared to beer, makeup, gas not so pricey by the gallon

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the price of gas on a steady increase – as of print time, it is $3.54 for a gallon of unleaded – it is hard to imagine any other necessity could be more expensive. However, there are many other items of the everyday college lifestyle that make gas seem cheap. The prices on all of the following items have been taken from Manhattan's local Wal-Mart, one of the most common shopping destinations for college students.

Since these items are not sold by the gallon, the unit price per ounce (or other unit of measure) was used and adjusted accordingly.

Note: A gallon contains 128 fluid ounces.

Incoming soldiers could strain area's housing, education system

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

During the past few weeks, 3,500 Fort Riley troops have returned from Iraq, adding taxpayers and consumers to the regional market. Over the next two years, more than 3,000 additional troops will be added.

Fort Riley will support about 15,500 troops this year, but Deb Skidmore, Fort Riley media relations officer, said that number will increase to 18,600, even if some troops are transferred to other forts. This increase will depend on when the government decides to pull larger numbers of troops out of Iraq, she said.

This influx will have some positive effects on the region, but it will also strain some of its systems, including housing, education and health care.

YEARLY ECONOMIC IMPACT OF THE AVERAGE FORT RILEY SOLDIER (BASED ON FISCAL YEAR 2006)
Military wages $32,253.81
Supplies/services/contracts $2,027.77
Construction $6,568.92
Education $234.45
Healthcare $1,099.58
- 2006 Fort Riley Economic Impact Summary

SPENDING MORE

The troops influx will add almost 7,000 consumers to the region. These consumers will buy houses and vehicles, and use various other local services.

"They will be buying groceries, cars and using recreational activities," Skidmore said. "This will help the economy of the region in many ways."

One of the biggest contributions to the region, especially Manhattan, will be sales tax, which funds much of the governmental actions of Manhattan, including most of the downtown redevelopment.

City Commissioner Bruce Snead said since Manhattan is the largest community located near the base, even if troops don't live in Manhattan, the city will still see their influences in sales tax on buying cars, eating out and shopping.

According to military.com, E-4 through E-6 soldiers, which comprise most soldiers at Fort Riley, make between $4,000 and $6,000 per month, much of which would be spent in Manhattan and the region surrounding Fort Riley.

Many of the troops that will be added during the next three years also will bring families, adding to the economic influence.

'GOOD' PROBLEMS

Many areas will be strained because of the sheer number of new troops and families in the area.

According to data presented at the February Community Partnership Conference between Fort Riley and Manhattan, more than 4,000 Fort Riley soldiers are in need of off-fort housing. By 2013, Fort Riley estimates 9,170 soldiers, more than double the current number, will be in need of off-fort housing.

Alison Kohler, assistant media relations officer for Fort Riley, said though Fort Riley offers on-fort housing options, many buy houses all over the region because of their families.

Snead said leaders in the region have been aware of the troop influx since the military determined to increase the number of troops at Fort Riley in its 2005 Base Realignment and Closure recommendations. He said Manhattan and other towns have worked with the military to expand the available housing within the troops' price range, which according to the PowerPoint is between $81,467 and $141,353 for most soldiers, or $676 to more than $1,100 for monthly rent costs.

"We are fortunate to have the fort in our community," Snead said. "Many others did not have the fortune with the alignment because of the BRAC."

Snead acknowledged there still will be housing problems.

"There will be challenges undoubtedly, and there will be shortages in some types of housing ... especially in the price range of many of the soldiers," he said.

Snead said Manhattan could also struggle to cover costs of additional children, in terms of child care and education services, and also health care for the new troops and families.

According to the Economic Impact statement from Fort Riley from fiscal year 2006, employees at Fort Riley contributed an average of $234.45 in education costs and almost $1,100 in health-care costs. These averages, especially education, could be higher because they take into account all Fort Riley affiliates, including retirees and civilian workers, who will not be increased in the next few years.

Manhattan/Ogden School Board member Peter Paukstelis said the school district already has felt the effects of the troop increase over the past few years, especially in elementary schools. The district opened Bluemont Elementary School and hired several teachers under a tight budget. He said the district expects more than 200 new students next year and will need to hire several new teachers.

Skidmore said Fort Riley has a health care center on fort, but many troops utilize regional hospitals for specialized care or because they are closer.

Mercy Regional Health Center in Manhattan receives more than $3.5 million per year to provide care for troops and their families through the TRICARE system, the military's health-care program for military personnel and their dependents. Mercy CEO Richard Allen said the hospital provided almost $750,000 more than the government-allotted amount; the hospital had to cover the costs of the additional troops.

Allen said the number of TRICARE patients has doubled in the past year, and the region cannot support the increased number of patients in many cases, he added.

"There are a lot of people who have to drive all the way to Kansas City to find a doctor," he said.

K-State economists disagree with USDA about corn, soy crops

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The U.S. Department of Agriculture released a report last month predicting fewer corn acres and more soybean acres this year compared to 2007. However, K-State agricultural economists no longer believe the report's numbers to be valid.

Mike Woolverton, a K-State Research and Extension agricultural economist, said he thinks more corn acres and less soybean acres will be produced than the report predicted.

According to the USDA Web site, the prediction estimates are made through surveys given to about 86,000 farm operators during the first two weeks of March. The USDA planting intentions report was released March 31, and it predicted corn growers would plant 86 million acres this year, an 8-percent decrease from last year.

"Expected [corn] acreage is down from last year in most states as favorable prices for other crops, high input cost for corn and crop rotation considerations are motivating some farmers to plant fewer acres to corn," the USDA report said.

The USDA also reported an 18-percent increase of soybean acreage, and if the numbers for soybean acres in 2008 are correct, the planted acreage in Kansas "will be the largest on record." Woolverton said people were surprised by the report's numbers.

"I think they were a little bit shocked," he said. "People didn't believe the number; they thought that was way too low. No one really disputed the soybean acreage projection, but they thought it was off on corn acres."

While the survey was given during the beginning of March, Woolverton said the farmer's situation had changed by the end of the month.

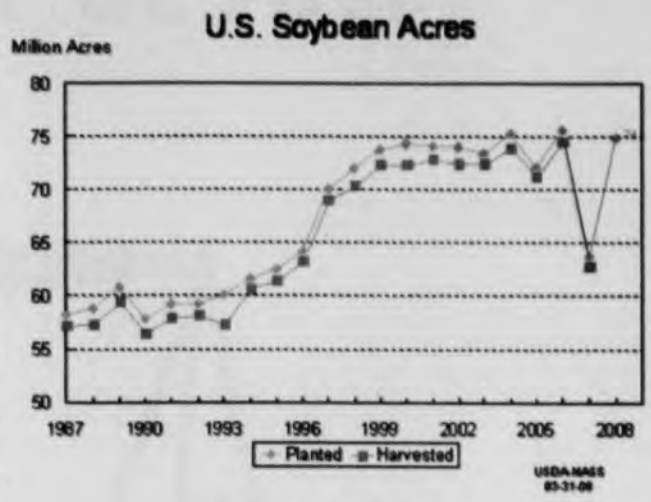
Art Barnaby, professor in agricultural economics, said changes in the market have affected the predictions since the report was released.

Crop soybean prices were reduced, while new crop corn bids increased, he said.

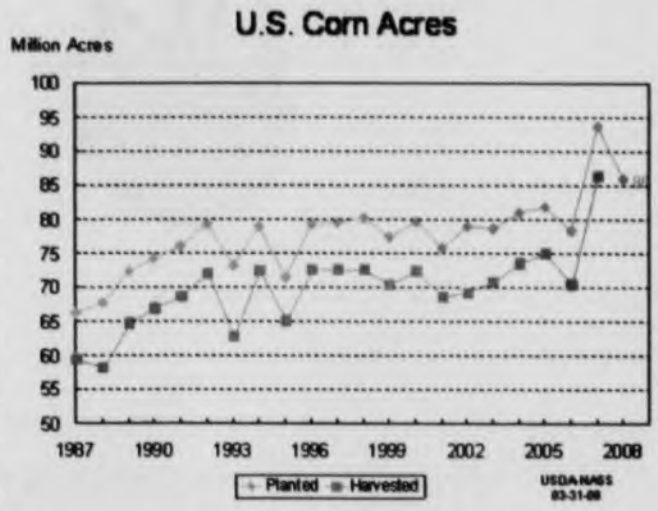
"It is a safe assumption that farmers will respond to the higher bids and plant more corn, unless wet weather prevents the planting," Barnaby said.

Woolverton said the industry thinks about 90 million acres of corn will be planted – still down 40 million from last year – and about 76 million acres of soybean will also be planted. However, there could be other setbacks for corn.

"We're having a wet-cold spring that's delaying the planting of corn," Woolverton said. "Corn planting should be a little underway right now, but it's just barely beginning in most of the corn belt, because it's colder than farmers would like.



"If we delay much longer, it reduces the yield potential. If this rainy, cool weather continues, what will happen is they'll still plant, but they won't plant 90 million acres and they'll result to soybeans."



Woolverton said corn seed price is high right now and farmers look at the anticipated selling price.

"Right now that's not the major issue," he said. "Right now they're looking at getting the seed in the ground. It becomes a physical aspect rather than economical."

Woolverton said the numbers for corn acreage are low, though not the lowest the country ever has seen. But it is causing concern among corn users.

Effects of marijuana-use not as harmful as alcohol

ADAM PHAM

He's often demonized as existentially lazy, obtuse and prone to erratic fits of violence. He might look just like one of us – and indeed is a great number of us, many with families and stable jobs.

He was recently described by John P. Walters as a "vicious criminal terrorist," and he and his forsaken friends litter our penal system, their lives and careers forever ruined on account of their victimless pastime. What could an honest, tax-paying, otherwise law-abiding citizen possibly do in this country to earn such a fate?

He need do nothing more than be an occasional user of marijuana.

Immediately after his appointment as the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy in late 2001, Walters began his fanatical campaign against marijuana, declaring it to be "America's most dangerous drug" and spreading sensational folklore like the notion modern marijuana is twice as potent as it used to be and has no more medical value than crack cocaine.

He proceeded to spend the next two years touring the United States, encouraging more draconian penalties and stifling any measure which might serve to reallocate money from punishment to rehabilitation. But though, by the ONCDP's own admission, $1 trillion has thus far been wasted on all of this disgraceful propaganda, after half a century of acquiescence the rhetoric is losing its luster. How could this be? Because despite the moral panic the disingenuous Drug Czar and his cohorts wish to foment, the empirical facts are demonstrably different.

In almost every controlled clinical study, marijuana doesn't actually cause mental or physical illness, long-term memory loss, sterility or any other impairment of the immune system, nor does it seem to cause lung cancer or emphysema without concurrent tobacco use.

It hasn't been proven to contribute to crime – other than marijuana possession, of course – and users don't even seem to be more likely to be involved in automobile fatalities. (This is, of course, in stark contrast to the havoc alcohol wreaks on our faculties of common sense and our bodies, and its own considerable contribution to the commission of crime.)

Marijuana doesn't appear to be a gateway to hard drugs to a greater extent than any of its legal counterparts. It doesn't cause the average college student any academic trouble, and wages among working adult users are, on average, actually higher than those of nonusers.

As to whether or not cannabis has any practical application, the answer is clearly a resounding "yes;" clinical studies have repeatedly demonstrated that THC could serve a valuable role in therapeutic medicine as a nausea-reliever, analgesic and antidepressant.

All of the above - which has been conveniently aggregated and cited on drugpolicy.org, by the way –; is more than one needs to prove the constitutional case anyway. Since when have such things been a constitutionally sufficient condition for prohibition? (To that end, one cannot help but wonder how many tireless opponents of marijuana have given testimony on the subject only with the aid of a certain addictive stimulant percolated in almost every American household.)

What kind of democracy is this anyway? Is it not the very point of our elegant Constitution to protect the interests of the minority from the tyranny of the majority? The War on Drugs has been perhaps the most embarrassing failure in the history of modern American public policy – Reuters reported back in 2006 that marijuana was officially the nation's largest cash crop.

Obviously prohibition is not the answer, and as always, this is merely an aside to a more profound conversation; rather than "How do we lower drug usage?" it seems we actually ought to be asking, "Why is it so high in the first place?"

Consistent exercise proven to reduce stress, cancer risk

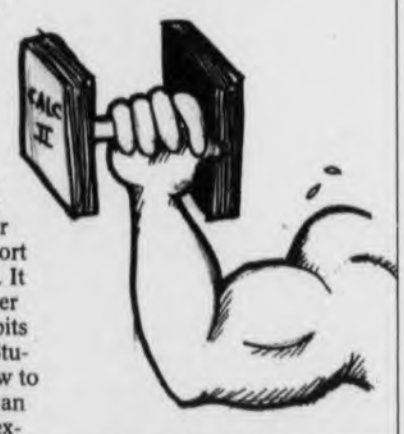
JOE VOSSEN

With final exams less than two weeks away, the anxiety of projects and tests is setting in around campus.

Graduation is creeping closer for seniors, and many are feeling the added stress of searching for the perfect job or graduate school. It becomes more difficult to make healthy decisions when pressure mounts at the end of the semester.

Students study longer hours and fuel their marathon study sessions with caffeine-laced cappuccinos or energy drinks. For some, a good night's sleep is no longer an option. Nutritious meals are replaced by junk food and snacks loaded with salt and calories. During the turmoil surrounding final exams, some students forgo the healthy habits they usually practice – bike rides, walks, visits to the rec – to find more time to study.

But now, more than ever, all of us should find time to care for our bodies. Finding time to exercise, eat right and sleep is difficult at this time of the semester, but science has shown (and many of us know) that exercise can help your body become a high-performance machine.



According to the Mayo Clinic's Web site, www.mayoclinic.org, even moderate exercise can improve your mood. Exercise can stimulate various brain chemicals that leave you feeling calmer and happier; engaging in regular physical activity has also been shown to reduce feelings of depression and anxiety – and there are plenty of those to go around during final exams.

Under the pressure of deadlines and borderline grades, many students resort to all-night study sessions to prepare themselves for upcoming tests. Unfortunately, a complete night's sleep – seven to eight hours – is the best way to improve concentration and productivity. The Mayo Clinic also states exercise is the best way to fall asleep faster and achieve deeper, more rejuvenating sleep.

Besides the benefits exercise brings during school, regular physical activity has advantages over a lifetime. Earlier this month, researchers at the American Association for Cancer Research annual meeting announced new findings that exercise can reduce the risk of breast cancer in women: Engaging in recreational exercise 30 to 150 minutes per week cut the likelihood of breast cancer in women in half. Several studies have shown that men who engage in frequent, vigorous physical activity can reduce the chance of developing prostate or colon cancer.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, only half of adolescents (people ages 12-21) participate in regular exercise. Almost a quarter of those same people report no physical activity at all. It is now, during our younger years, that we set our habits for the rest of our lives. Students should exercise now to not only give themselves an added edge during final exams, but to improve the quality of their lives for years to come.

To the three girls dancing in their front yard on Bluemont: I want you bad.

I just saw cockroaches in Kramer Dining Center. I repeat: cockroaches.

If you can't tell, that's the theme song to "Doug."

Greek Affairs and the banquet they put together might be one of the biggest jokes of this university.

IFC: Learn how to put an awards banquet together. It might do you some good.

Dean Bosco: Our Greek system is falling into a state of disrepair. Please take action.

To the girl that sits behind me in my human development class: I read your AIM convo's every day. Your friends are right. Your boyfriend's a jerk, and you should break up with him.

To the ATO with the big navy truck: We hope you enjoyed your microwave and TV.

Thank you to the "Romeo and Juliet" cast for a great performance.

As agriculturally based as this university is, you'd think they could do something about all the dandelions.

Um, it's definitely Sunday night, and I'm living la vida drunk-o.

I can't wait until I get to wear my Jordy Nelson jersey with my Michael Beasley basketball shoes next year.

Matt Combes strikes again.

Hey, you know what? I believe this is the first time anyone's called the Fourum all the way from Japan. I don't care if it costs 60 yen a minute. I'm studying abroad, and I'm a guy from K-State, so I still want to call you from where I am.

I'm a Pisces, and I'm pretty sure the Collegian's horoscope just told me to be a prostitute.

Too bad we'll never hear the phrase "Brett Favre to Jordy Nelson. Touchdown."

Why do they always have sex articles on Monday? Wouldn't it be way more useful on Friday?

TO THE POINT

KSU Police should advocate program

The K-State Police's Silent Witness program seems to have the potential to be effective; however, the fact it has been around at least 12 years and very few people on campus seem to know it even exists shows it is not effective at all.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

This is not a program the university should be lax about promoting – this concerns the safety of K-State students and faculty. If there are methods of finding out more quickly when a crime occurs on campus and who might be behind it – even if the source is anonymous – then the university should make sure these methods are well known so students can utilize them.

There are some easy and low-cost promotional methods that the university could use to help promote the Silent Witness program. First there could simply be posters around campus detailing the program.

Also, a Facebook.com group, MySpace.com group, or even a blog could be set up on which students could be messaged for free with more inforation.

Or how about sidewalk chalkings? It seems to work for other campus organizations, so perhaps the university could simply send a few people out to start educating the people on our campus about an important crime-fighting program.

Heritage Day to feature Native-American art, music, basket weaving

By Jasmine Hammond
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In efforts to showcase their heritage, the Native American Student Association will celebrate its second-annual Heritage Day on Wednesday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the K-State Student Union Courtyard.

NASA has organized many powwows and brought a number of speakers to K-State in the past.

The student group has celebrated Native American Heritage Month for years at K-State, but this is its second year having a Native American Heritage Day, said Georgia Perez, NASA adviser.

The day will consist of different events which include art displays, music, basket weaving and activities.

Arthur Short Bull, Oglala Lakota from the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, a world-renowned artist, will display his artwork for the Wednesday event.

Leslie Hannah, assistant professor of arts, science and business at the K-State-Salina campus, will lead a discussion about the Cherokee nation and its heritage. A Native American historian, he will talk about basket weaving.

"He will be making miniature Cherokee baskets in groups of five that will symbolize the seven clans of the Cherokee Nation," Perez said.

Some of K-State's students received an opportunity to attend a powwow earlier this April.

Reuben Ironhorse will play his flute and he will also display some of his artwork.

"We are trying to have different nations come and display their cultures during the day," Perez said.

Many students surveyed unaware of K-State Silent Witness Program

By Willow Williamson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

HOW TO USE THE SILENT WITNESS PROGRAM

Go to: www.ksu.edu/police/silent/
Enter the following information (if known) as specifically as possible:

— Location of crime
— Date and time crime occurred
— Explanation of possible suspects

For at least 12 years, the K-State Police's Silent Witness program has allowed faculty and students to report crimes anonymously, but it seems no one knows about it.

Capt. Don Stubbings of campus police said the program was started at least a year before he came to the department 11 years ago.

The program is a resource for people who have witnessed some type of crime on campus, like theft, assault or illegal drug use. The program provides a form that allows the witness to anonymously report any information pertaining to the crime.

"It cannot be traced," Stubbings said. "We cannot trace it back to an IP address or anything. I don't even know how to. It's completely anonymous."

It is important for the police to have specific and accurate details if they are to use the tips, Stubbings said. The campus police receive about one tip through the program every two weeks, but more often than not the tips are not very helpful because they are too vague.

"A lot of times they are non-specific, so a lot of times it is difficult to pinpoint where the crime occurs," he said. "I encourage people to use it and be as detailed as possible in their reporting."

Stubbings said often people choose to just call the department or send a regular e-mail with contact information instead of using the Silent Witness program. However, it seems most people on campus do not know the program even exists.

When surveyed in the K-State Student Union, only two people out of 30 had even heard of the program, and neither of the two who had heard about it had ever used the program. All those surveyed were affiliated with K-State in some way, and some, like Preston Sperry, graduate student in business, have been at K-State for several years.

Sperry, who spent all his undergraduate years at K-State, said he has never heard of the program, though it seems like something similar to other programs like Wildcat Walk. He said the Silent Witness program is something he would consider using if he knew about it.

Austin Vandorn, junior in secondary education, said he thought it was good that there are alternatives for people who witness crimes. However, he said it is upsetting such a program exists and he – and almost everyone else – have never heard of it.

The K-State Fieldhouse Development Indoor Facility at Colbert Hills Golf Course features three all-weather hitting bays, indoor putting surfaces and an additional hitting bay with video swing-analysis technology.

New indoor practice area helps improve golf program

By Cole Manbeck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 2007-08 K-State men's golf team has arguably been the most successful men's golf team ever at K-State.

Its eight top-five finishes place them in a tie for the school record, and they set a new team-scoring record with an average team score of 293.36 per round.

This might have never happened though without commitment to the golf program and the addition of the K-State Fieldhouse Development Indoor Facility at Colbert Hills Golf Course.

The $275,000 structure is a 1,344-square-foot, all-weather practice facility consisting of three hitting bays, an indoor putting surface and a hitting bay with cutting-edge video technology.

Coach Tim Norris said one of the most important advantages the facility offers is it allows up to six golfers to hit full shots onto the driving range at Colbert Hills, regardless of weather conditions.

"Seeing the ball fly and where it lands makes a huge difference rather than just hitting into a net," Norris said. "It's such a game of feel, and being able to see the ball fly is an important factor."

Junior golfer Robert Streb agreed with Norris about the importance of seeing where the ball lands.

"Watching it fly and seeing what it does is important," he said. "When we used to hit into the nets, they were only 20 or 30 yards in front of you so you could hit it solid but not see if the shot had a draw or if it was going to go right."

Norris said the facility has helped the team transition from the fall to spring season.

"We hit a lot of golf balls out here this winter in the snow," he said. "We were able to go out and never miss a day, and the value from it was very good."

The facility is not just a development facility for the golfers.

"It shows the players that we have made a commitment," Norris said. "There's a factor that shows we are serious about golf here."

Norris said the Wildcats got off to a slow start in the fall this year, but it is usually the opposite for them.

"We are used to getting off to a strong start in the fall, and then we generally struggle a little bit in the first couple of tournaments in the spring," he said. "This year we rebounded from the slow start and jumped quite a bit in the standings from the fall to spring season."

K-State entered Monday ranked the No. 73 team in the country, according to golfweek.com, and is close to receiving a berth to the NCAA Regionals. The top-84 teams will make it to Regionals, with 28 of those teams being automatic conference berths.

"We are going to be one of the last teams in or one of the last teams out, but it can't diminish all of the great things we have accomplished this year," Norris said. "All of our guys are very upbeat about what we were able to accomplish this season."

Nelson looks like good fit for Packers

JOEL JELLISON

If you ventured to the Green Bay Packers' Web site shortly after they drafted former K-State wide receiver Jordy Nelson, you know they felt strongly about drafting him with their first pick in the draft.

Besides Koren Robinson, at 6 feet, 2 inches, the Packers brass felt their primary corps of receivers was undersized and Nelson brought a new type of receiver to the group.

Nelson can run, make quick cuts and run several different routes very well. For the Packers, it was the right pick for them with the fifth pick of the second round.

It should be no surprise Green Bay took Nelson as early as they did, especially after St. Louis jumped way off the board for Houston's Donnie Avery. However, Nelson looks like a more-solidified package than Avery.

Most of the talk concerning the Packers' pick was how great it was for a team to pick a guy with a good character and a background that doesn't include any trouble.

Some of the talk, and the more important view of the pick, in my opinion, was concerning how Nelson fits into the Packers offensive system. If you see the Packers play, you know they run a West-Coast type of system similar, in the opinion of Green Bay general manager Ted Thompson, to what the Wildcats run. In the view of the Packers organization, Nelson is a player who can immediately come in and contribute in some way as he is familiar with the system.

Nelson also has the benefit of being a diverse player who can play both offense and special teams. While at K-State, Nelson was assigned the position of defensive back before wide receiver, which means he can return, and he can play in coverage.

Going into the draft, most believed Nelson was going to be a third-round receiver, but Nelson told me Sunday they were sure he was a second-round guy. For me, that means four of the first five teams that picked in the second round probably took a good, hard look at what Nelson could bring their team. Even the Packers admitted Nelson was one of four players they had eyed for the position, with Nelson being the best pick at that point.

With Nelson's background, Green Bay seems to be the perfect place for him – a place where he can be surrounded by the history of one of the most storied franchises in the NFL.

Now that Nelson is officially a member of an NFL team, K-State fans can sit back and watch how well this perfect fit will do when he finally takes the field this September.

Cats to travel to Wichita to play No. 8 Shockers at Eck Stadium

K-State will step out of the Big 12 Conference for one of the last times this season as the Wildcats travel two hours south to Wichita, Kan., to face No. 8 Wichita State today beginning at 7 p.m. at Eck Stadium.

The game, which completes the home-and-home season series, can be heard in the Manhattan area on KMAN (1350 AM) or online at www.k-statesports.com with Brian Smoller and Matt Walters calling the action.

K-State comes into the mid-week contest after dropping two of three against Texas in Manhattan last weekend.

On Friday, the Wildcats were down 6-3 heading bottom of the ninth, but K-State could only score two runs in the inning and left the tying run at third base as the Longhorns held on for a 6-5 victory.

WILEY

K-State came back on Saturday and received a remarkable pitching performance from starter Brad Hutt, who went 8.0 innings and sprayed seven hits and allowed just one earned run to take the win en route to earning Big 12 Pitcher of the Week honors.

Byron Wiley sealed the game with a two-run single in the seventh and the Wildcats defeated Texas in Manhattan for the first time since March 22, 1998.

On Sunday, Texas, propelled by a four-run first inning, took the rubber match, 7-4.

The Wildcats will send sophomore right hander A.J. Morris to the mound against the Shockers.

The Humble, Texas, product is 3-2 on the year with a 5.31 ERA, allowing 14 walks and striking out 23 batters in 39.0 innings.

Wichita State will counter with junior right hander Tyler Fleming, who is 3-1 with a 2.23 ERA.

Rob Jackson selected in 7th round of Draft

Former K-State defensive end Rob Jackson became the second Wildcat to be selected in the 2008 NFL Draft when he was taken in the seventh round by the Washington Redskins.

Jackson, who became K-State's 47th player drafted since 1992, followed wide receiver Jordy Nelson, who was Green Bay's first selection of the draft at No. 36 overall on Saturday. K-State has now had two or more players taken in the NFL Draft in eight of the last 10 years.

A native of West Haven, Conn., Jackson started 23 of 25 career games as a Wildcat and totaled 61 tackles, 13 of which went for losses, and 6.5 sacks in two seasons in Manhattan.

This past season, Jackson tallied 25 total stops, 4.5 behind the line of scrimmage, with two sacks in 12 games played.

As a junior, Jackson earned honorable mention All-Big 12 honors from the coaches after collecting 36 tackles while ranking second on the team in both tackles for loss (8.5) and sacks (4.5).

Jackson ranked 20th in the Big 12 among defensive linemen with 24 total tackles in league games and eighth in the league with four sacks in conference games.

Several former K-State players have played for the Redskins before, including running back Rock Cartwright, wide receiver Kevin Lockett and defensive end Melvin Williams.

City to discuss redevelopment

By Mark Savoy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Today the city commission will assess what can be done to improve the south end redevelopment.

HATESOHL

The project, located south of Manhattan Town Center, is focused on the Discovery Center, a park, hotel, conference center, parking garage, theater, restaurants, retail, office and residential uses, according to the agenda.

Warren Theatres will continue to make a push for a larger theater. Its latest proposals have called for 50,000 square feet of land, an increase of 20,000 square feet from its original proposal. Warren Theatres wants to build a 12-screen, 1,800-seat complex in Manhattan.

"I would say that the Warren people have a premium service they offer through their theaters," Hatesohl said. "The theaters they have are much nicer than average theaters. It'd be a great upgrade for the community because it would be much nicer than the theaters available at present."

One of the concerns of Warren Theatres is the public acre park might compete for limited parking space available in the area. Warren Theatres' new proposals have asked for more land as a means to increase parking availability for their theater.

Warren Theatres also have asked that a restaurant be located in its theater. In the south end, proposed small ice cream, coffee, deli and sandwich shops will complement the theater. A conference center also would be developed in the south end in an attempt to draw business from the state to Manhattan.

The city administration contracted Bowman, Bowman & Novick to design the overall development plans for the area. Community members have asked that the new developments be child friendly and family oriented in a forum. Several Manhattan residents noted the importance of the proposal, and the impact it will have on the community.

Media Center provides CD, DVD services

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many students are unaware that while they work on projects on the main floor of Hale Library, a technologically advanced center, which offers many creative media for students to utilize, is just down the hall.

The Media Development Center, a branch of iTAC located on the second floor of Hale, is stocked with professional-quality digital-media technology and software. The center is intended to encourage students to advance their technological knowledge and create high-quality projects, which will help them in today's digital society, said Chad Palmer, junior in English and mass communications.

"Almost all of the technology we have available is digital, and in the society we live in today, everything's digital," Palmer said, who has worked at the center for a year.

"The staff is here to teach students how to use the technology, but we don't do the homework for them. We teach them so they can become better with the fields they are going into."

The center's services include help with video editing, audio editing, imaging, photo editing, Web design, 3-D animation, AutoCAD software for blueprint drawings, extremely high-resolution film scanners, software to create PDF files, burning and duplicating CDs and DVDs and making labels. The center also has a sound booth for students to record music, available with audio-recording software intended for beginning students and software to make professional-quality CDs.

Palmer said the center offers four different kinds of video editing software for both Macintosh and PC formats, and all of its video and audio software is professional quality. The center also has a checkout system, which allows students to borrow video camcorders and audio recorders.

Palmer said some students use the center almost every day, but many do not realize it even exists.

"The amount of students that come in vary from day to day, but a lot don't even know we're here, how much we have or what we can do – they don't realize there's an actual sound booth on campus," he said. "However, even though it's a small lab, a lot of people come in wanting to advance their careers in media."

Finals week and dead week are the center's busiest times, said Phyllis Epps, co-manager of the center. During these two weeks, it's open from 8 a.m. to midnight.

"We'll have people in here at 8 a.m., and they'll be here until midnight," she said. "They're here all hours of the day. Most of the students are working on projects assigned from their professors, and we're able to offer them all the services and equipment they need. We have everything they need if their professors are giving them the latitude to be creative."

Many students appreciate and take advantage of the center's extended hours, assistance and services, she said.

"I'm here every time I have homework," said Zach Powell, freshman in aviation. "They have a lot of stuff and much quicker computers, and there's also a help desk if I need anything."

Palmer said the center previously was located on the third floor, but since they got more computers and technology, Hale workers moved iTAC to the second floor because it needed more room. He said the center has constantly been keeping up with technology developments and will continue to update.

Palmer said he enjoys working at the center.

"I really like working here," he said. "Most of the time, I'm just hanging out here doing homework unless someone needs help. We have a lot of repeat customers who already know what they're doing, but if students come in who don't, we're here to help them."

TO THE EDITOR

Concealed-carry issue sparks discussion

Editor,

I attended the forum regarding the issue of conceal and carry being extended to universities Thursday night, and I was very disappointed there was no representative of the "anti-concealed-carry" camp.

I am shocked not one person who challenges my right to self-defense and self-preservation could even show up to explain their point of view on the subject. This issue is very important, not just to me, but to every student, parent and faculty member of this and every university in the nation, and when only one side shows up to a debate, it makes it very obvious who is confident enough to back up their beliefs.

I don't think you should be afraid to speak your mind; on the contrary, I invite even the most rabid anti-CC activist to come and explain to me their position. If anything, the lack of opposition leads me to question the judgment of this university. If no one feels passionately about stopping legal CC permit owners from carrying on campus, why even have the debate? Why continue to ban such people from legally carrying their concealed firearms on campus?

I'm afraid my life, the lives of my friends and even the lives of total strangers are too important to ignore. Either stand up and tell me why I am sacrificing my personal safety or get out of the way of progress.

Kyle Casey
SOPHOMORE IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

Editor,

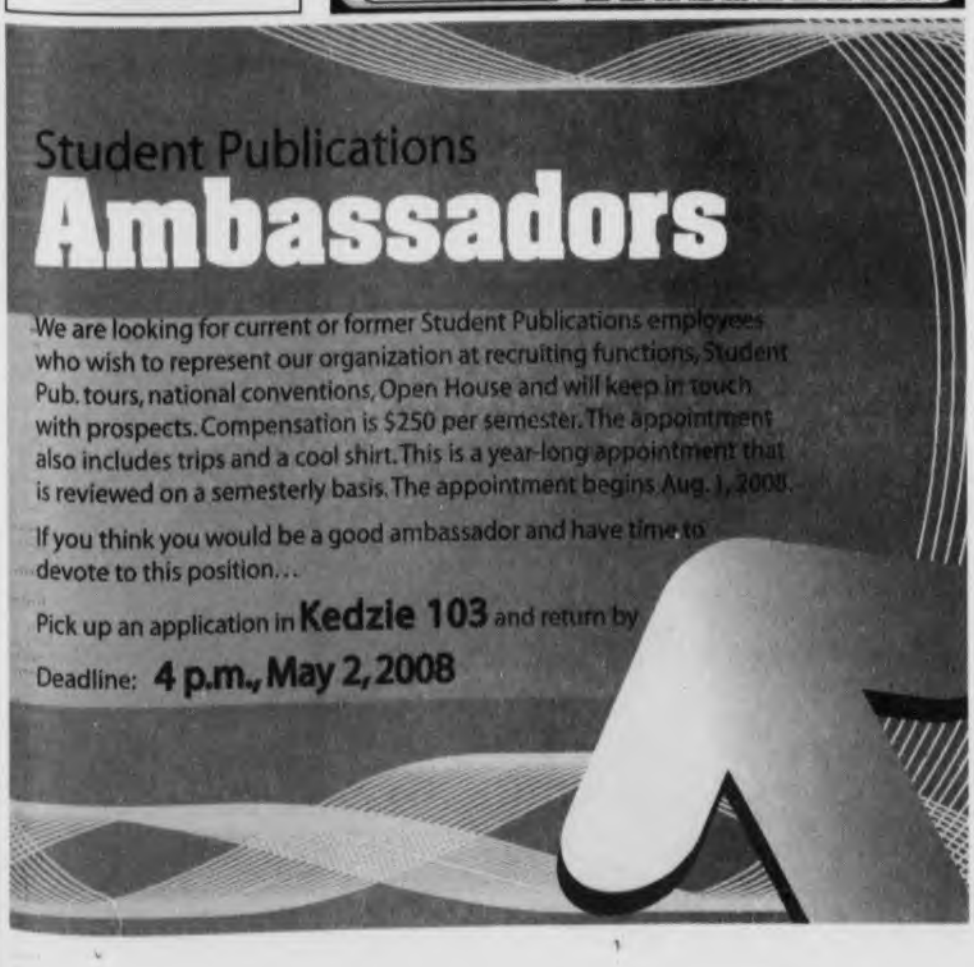
Monday a letter to the editor was printed saying the "SCCC should be balanced." This letter was written under a complete lack of knowledge and information about the debate that took place last week. The debate was not organized by SCCC. This has been an issue no one has been willing to recognize for one reason or another. SCCC was in no way affiliated with this event. This event was coordinated and organized by me, with the help of a few friends.

The letter written yesterday accused the event of being one-sided. This is a true statement, but there was a valid reason. Not one anti-concealed-carry proponent, not one anti-gun proponent and not one liberal proponent came through for me. We had people of the opposition who had agreed to speak at the event cancel on us the day before the event and even the day of.

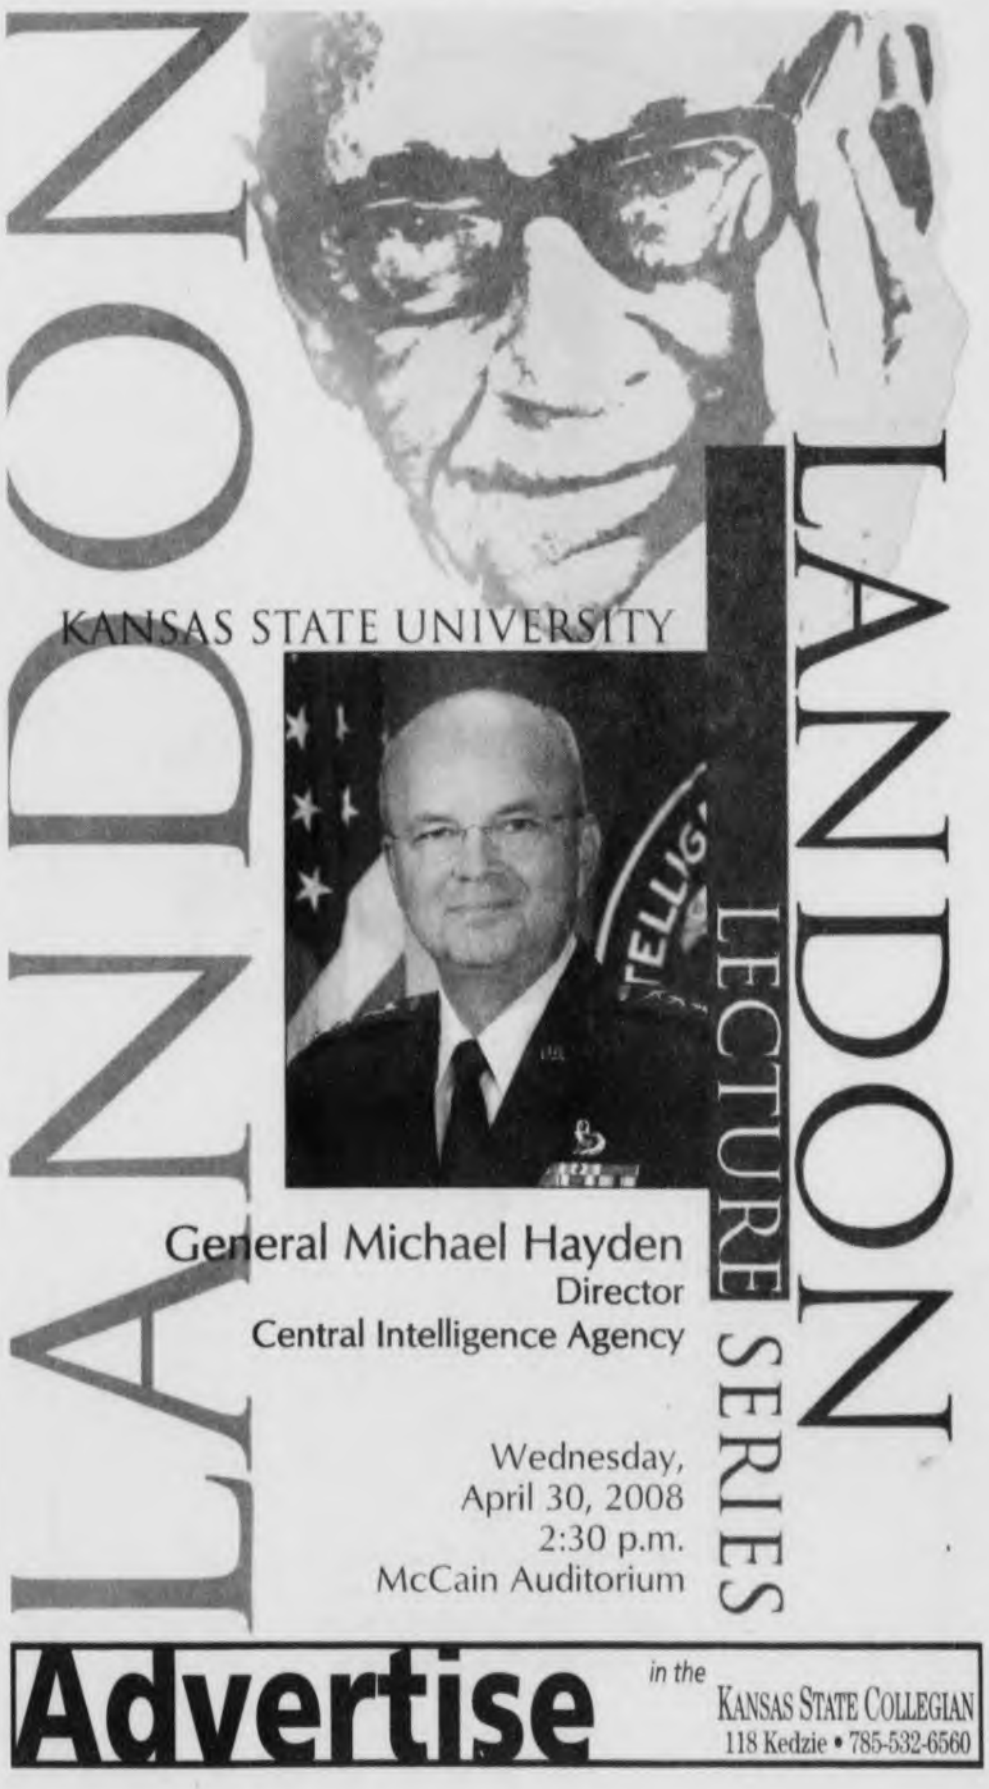
Why is it opposition is not willing to talk about this issue in a public forum? The pro-concealed-carry speakers came through without any hiccups. Myself and everyone helping me tried our very hardest to get someone from the opposition. We made contact with more than 25 people to speak for the opposition, and not one of them came through. Contact with some people was made as much as a month and a half before the event. Everything possible was done, including running to multiple departments the day of to try and find an opponent after our two anti-concealed-carry speakers dropped out at the last minute. I even tried contacting the Young Democrats and the Progressive Alliance.

Timothy Schuler needed to get his ducks in a row before writing a letter. He did not know the facts, and I am tired of everyone attacking the SCCC and this event because of their political beliefs and lack of information. Even if you are anti-concealed carry on campus, you could have come to this discussion and learned something. It was not a propaganda attack, and it was not purposely set up to be on the side of pro-concealed-carry individuals.

The viewpoints discussed – granted, sometimes in unorganized context – were not egocentric. The statement about the man in a black trench coat was a statement made to state a point. It is egocentric, ignorant and narrow-minded to accuse pro-concealed-carry advocates of being egocentric when you refuse to learn the facts of the very event you write about.



I strongly encourage everyone to learn the facts about the Concealed Carry on Campus Debate last Thursday, as well as the issue as a whole. Please make sure you get an accurate account of the issues though – not one made without knowing all the facts.



Any questions over the event and what the facts are can be posed to me at my e-mail address, ddshane@ksu.edu. I look forward to answering any valid questions.

Students featured in 2007-08 RP view book prior to its release today

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dozens of K-State students had the chance to take a peek at the 2007-08 Royal Purple yearbook before the rest of the campus did at an invitation-only release party on Monday.

Erin Stauffer, senior in mass communications and marketing director for the Royal Purple, conceived the idea of having a release party for those featured in the book.

The rest of the student body will be able to pick up a copy of the RP today through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m, in the Bosco Student Plaza.

The staff sent out invitations to people in the book to come in and enjoy refreshments while checking out the new book, Stauffer said.

"The first thing they want to do is open up the book to see their story, then they want to know what's on the DVD," she said.

This semester, the staff made efforts to increase the awareness of the book. She said their main focus this year was telling more personal stories instead of generalizing K-State.

Sarah Thomas, editor-in-chief of the RP and junior in mass communications, said the party also served as a way for students to see where the Royal Purple is produced.

"It gave us a chance to show off and let people get to know where our office is," she said.

She said she also thought the party would be a good idea to tell people they are in the book in hopes they would purchase a copy.

"A lot of times people are in the book, and they don't remember that they are," she said.

The concept for the book is what appears to be a simple dash, but actually symbolizes the dash on a tombstone between the birthdate and deathdate.

The time between the years – the dash – represents the person's life. For the Royal Purple, it symbolizes how students spent their academic year, 2007-08.

The slogan for this year's book is, "How did you spend your dash?"

"I thought it would be really cool and different," Thomas said about the slogan.

Leah Ost and a friend went to the RP room around noon to pick up Ost's copy of the yearbook.

As she thumbed through the book, she found her story, which featured her marketing class group project that took her all semester.

"Oh, my – that's my class picture," she said after finding her page. "That's right, I remember that, in my business management class we were working on this massive semester project – we met every week."

Ost said her favorite part of the book is reading current events.

"I really like it because it recaps the year," she said.

Though the RP is the best-selling yearbook in the nation, according to the College Media Advisers, every year the RP sells only about 2,000 books, Thomas said. But she said K-State is not the only college suffering from low yearbook sales. Other campuses across the country are as well.

Thomas said the staff has worked hard this year to promote the book and make it "cooler," including a compilation CD of local bands.

This year, they have ordered more than 2,500 books, and Thomas said they are hoping to sell out.

Next year will be the RP's 100th-year anniversary, which could have the potential to be "hyped up," she said.

Thomas said she has dealt with some frustration with having to establish a name for the Royal Purple on campus when they are recognized all across the country.

"When we go to college media conferences, people know who we are," she said. "But when we get back to campus we are still trying to let people know we exist."

Thomas said when she stepped into her job, she was nervous about selling books and having such a large responsibility, but she said this year couldn't have gone any better.

"This year has been spectacular," she said. "The staff has worked really hard, and I wouldn't change anything about this experience – I think this is one of the best years that the Royal Purple has had."

Manhattan and K-State: Roaring through the '20s

Matt Castro | COLLEGIAN

Rita Weltsch, senior in modern languages education, gives a presentation Monday evening in the K-State Student Union's Big 12 room over the 1920s culture in Manhattan. Nine other students gave similar presentations over different topics about the history of Manhattan and K-State.

USDA | Numbers higher than actually reported

"The corn prices are remaining high," Woolverton said. "They're really counting on a good harvest in the fall."

If the report were true, Woolverton said there could be a possibility of a corn shortage. Though it is believed the numbers are higher than reported, if the corn is planted late there could be a relative shortage of corn and the prices will remain high.

Barnaby said farmers can plant corn without a reduction in their crop insurance coverage until May 31, but if the wet weather continues and they are unable to plant their corn, it is likely they will plant soybeans instead because the final planting date is June 15.

He said if weather prevents the planting of soybeans by that date, then farmers have a choice – they can either take reduced crop insurance coverage for every day they are late or they can make a prevented planting payment claim on their crop insurance contract. While the USDA does a good job collecting data and reporting it each year, Woolverton said many factors like prices change day by day.

"This is sort of the nature of these things," he said. "The actuality is different than the forecast."

Soldiers | Costs to increase

The hospital costs and traveling costs most likely will increase with the return of the Fort Riley soldiers.

Snead said regional leaders are ready for and welcome the troop return and build-up at Fort Riley, though the soldiers could pose problems to several community services.

"They are not simple problems, but they are good problems to have in a community," Snead said.

Kansas soldiers to vote by snail mail while some states now use updated e-mail ballots

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – U.S. forces in Iraq and Afghanistan can speak to their families by Web camera and fight insurgents using sophisticated electronic warfare. Yet when it comes to voting, most troops are stuck in the past.

Communities in 13 states will send overseas troops presidential election ballots by e-mail this year, and districts in at least seven states will also let them return completed ballots over the Internet, according to data compiled by The Associated Press and the Overseas Vote Foundation.

That still leaves tens of thousands of service members in far-flung military bases struggling to meet voting deadlines and relying largely on regular mail to get ballots and cast votes – often at the last minute because of delays in ballot preparations in some states.

Adding an electronic boost to the process would ease those problems, but it raises security and privacy concerns.

Pentagon officials have been urging more states to move into the electronic age before November, a move that could help reverse recent trends in which thousands of military members asked for ballots but either didn't vote or had their ballots rejected for flaws.

The push comes more than seven years after problems with overseas military voting set off an uproar in President Bush's narrow 2000 victory. In Florida, where Bush squeaked out a 537-vote victory that gave him the presidency, questions were raised about several thousand overseas military votes that came in after deadlines and were counted in some districts but not counted in others.

This year, when war is a key campaign issue, the election results in any state – particularly one with heavy military voting – could turn on the votes of thousands of troops on the front lines.

"The personnel that fight our wars, the people who are most affected by the decisions on the use of the military, are being systematically denied the right to vote," said Bob Carey, a board member of the Overseas Vote Foundation, a voting rights group. "I find that pretty tough to swallow. If a president decides to deploy military troops somewhere, it's these troops that are going to go."

Carey, a Navy reservist who has served in Iraq, noted that ballots are often not prepared and ready to be mailed until 30 to 45 days before an election. And since it can take more than two weeks for troops to get ballots by regular mail, they sometimes get them too late to meet voting deadlines.

Indiana Secretary of State Todd Rokita, who is president of the National Association of Secretaries of State, said the use of e-mail is a controversial subject among his members. Yet, he said his state has had no problems using e-mail to both deliver and receive ballots from overseas voters.

"The fact of the matter is, we're voting in the same way we were voting in the 1850s," Rokita said of many other states. While a number of states are looking at the e-mail process to speed up delivery of ballots to military voters, he said the issue "is tied up in the national debate on whether we need a paper trail. Some are so scared of technology, they want to be tied to a piece of paper."

In most states that allow e-mail balloting, the voter must also follow up by mailing in the ballot. And states that permit e-mail balloting warn that it is not a secure way to transmit personal information.

States that will send a blank ballot by e-mail are: Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Mississippi, Montana, North Dakota, Oregon, South Carolina, Virginia, Washington and Wisconsin. However, in some states, such as Illinois, only certain voting districts participate in the e-mail balloting.

States where voters can return completed ballots by e-mail are: Colorado, Indiana, Mississippi, Montana, North Dakota, South Carolina and Washington.

In some communities only members of the military may use e-mail balloting. In others all registered voters may do so. And officials noted that options may change as the year goes on, so voters should check with local districts and Web sites for updates. As an example, Missouri allowed some e-mail voting in the past, and may again.

Polli Brunelli, director of the Federal Voter Assistance Program, said that while voting by mail can work well, "it doesn't always get through." Ballot delivery, she said, is slowed by weather conditions or delays in printing or getting final approvals at the local level.

"The nice thing about the e-balloting process is that it's portable," she said, noting that troops often move around and at times have more reliable access to e-mail than regular mail. "I think we're building confidence in that process. It's a slow thing, but I think we're moving right along."

Of the roughly 1.3 million active duty military eligible to vote, about 500,000 are deployed overseas or permanently assigned there.

Men and women in uniform make up an increasingly active voting block. Brunelli said that 73 percent of all military members voted in 2004, compared with 57 percent in 2000.

A less-scientific report from the U.S. Election Assistance Commission suggested there were significant problems for military members and others who tried to vote from overseas.

According to the commission's survey, nearly 1 million overseas voters – including service members, federal employees and other citizens – requested absentee ballots for the 2006 local, state and congressional elections. Of those, the survey said, more than two-thirds were never counted, largely because the ballots were returned to the local election officials as undeliverable.

The survey released late last year indicated that more than half of the ballots from the military overseas voters were not counted. The commission noted, however, that response rates to the survey varied across the country, as did the way localities collected and reported their voting statistics.

McNair scholars attend banquet, prepare for graduate school

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State McNair scholars gathered for a recognition banquet on Monday evening at the K-State Student Union Ballroom. Academic mentors and family members were also in attendance to celebrate students' achievements.

The McNair Scholars Program, which follows the motto "When all is said and done, did I do my best?" helps students start successful careers as graduate students, professors and professional researchers.

The program is named after the late Ronald E. McNair. In 1986, Congress honored McNair for his accomplishments as a scholar and astronaut by funding the Ronald E. McNair Post-Baccalaureate Achievement program.

"Today is a celebration of scholars who have completed undergraduate research projects," said Kathleen Green, director of the McNair Scholars Program. "The purpose of a McNair project is to prepare students for graduate education. Hopefully, they will diversify faculty in places like K-State."

In a McNair scholar's final year of undergraduate study, the program's staff focuses on the process of choosing schools, reviewing application materials and helping find resources for financing a graduate education.

Students are encouraged to attend seminars about asking faculty for letters of reference or writing a strong statement of purpose.

"We usually have 20 students every year, very many of them do go to graduate school," said Lora Boyer, associate director of the McNair Scholars program. "We are not recruiting for K-State. We encourage students to find a program which is the best fit for their goals."

Two years ago, Ashley Wheeler, now a senior in mathematics, received an e-mail with an invitation to the program. She said she browsed the program's Web site and decided to get involved.

"The thing I like about the program is that I can see what other people, who have nothing to do with my field, are doing," Wheeler said.

The sense of community develops while participants attend monthly meetings to share information relevant to the pursuit of a graduate degree.

Erica Cain, graduate student in microbiology, said she participated in the program last year.

"It helps students from under-represented groups – either minorities or first-generation college students – to learn about the whole process of going to graduate school," Cain said. "It puts you in a research environment."

It is a great choice for people who otherwise wouldn't have such opportunity."

McNair scholars are expected to maintain the academic standards set by the program and to work at improving the skills needed for success in graduate school.

Nathaniel LaRue | COLLEGIAN

The 2008 K-State McNair scholars wait to be announced Monday evening at a banquet in their honor. The McNair scholars are mentored throughout their college careers by professors in their chosen fields and also do research to prepare them for post-graduate studies.

Some students said it was challenging to cope with all the work and projects while writing research proposals, but the result made it worth their time and efforts.

LECTURE | Students encouraged to hear Hayden

of privacy.

Hayden is a four-star Air Force general, which means he is the highest-ranking intelligence officer in the military. Many legislators criticized him for remaining an officer after taking the CIA job, fearing of a military intervention in the intelligence agency. Last week, he announced he would retire from the Air Force.

Dale Herspring, university distinguished professor in political science, worked in the U.S. State Department's Foreign Service for 20 years and said he worked with CIA officials often. He said Hayden has generally been accepted as a better, tighter manager in the CIA.

"From everything we can see, so far he's done a good job," Herspring said.

Reagan said he hopes for a large turnout, especially from political science and journalism faculty and students. He said members of the K-State and Manhattan community should attend because most will not have the opportunity to see the CIA director free of charge and ask him questions directly at any other time in their lives.

"If you had a chance to see a band like Van Halen live or buy the tape, what would you do?" Reagan said. "And this is free."

Reagan said K-State students should take advantage of a series that most other students in the U.S. will never have access to. For example, Johnson County Community College recently hosted a lecture series that has lesser-known political figures and also charges students $50-$65.

A question-and-answer series will follow the lecture.

Artsy fartsy

Restroom messages both humorous, vulgar in nature

ERIC DAVIS

I have often heard people say they get their best thinking done while going to the bathroom.

If that's the case, then only the most ignorant people use public bathrooms.

We've all seen it. The "art" in public bathrooms gives us a number to call for a good time or lets us know who is ahead in the latest presidential poll.

The drawings, poems, limericks and quotes are etched in, drawn on and sometimes even painted as if the stall walls are the last area on Earth these people have to communicate with the outside world before they die. Doug Rice, author of the book "From the Stall," took a look at bathroom art and complied some of his favorites in a colorful book.

The book contains photos from universities across Michigan. There are depictions of sex acts and funny poems, but the overwhelming majority of the art is vulgar in some way. Don't get me wrong, the art is at least entertaining, but Rice decided to augment each of the pictures by adding a caption on the side of every page.

Some of the lines do inspire laughter, but most of them are just dumb. The majority just repeats something in the picture, and the reader would have been better served if Rice had just left them out.

When I was done reading the book, I was left trying to figure out what would ever posses someone to write such vulgarities. I also tried to envision what I would write if the only restriction I had was my creativity. And finally, what would K-State students write? I decided to investigate bathrooms around campus.

My journey led me into a wide variety of bathrooms from all over campus and even a few in Aggieville. I am proud to say the art I found on campus and in the 'ville is just as good, if not better, than that in the book.

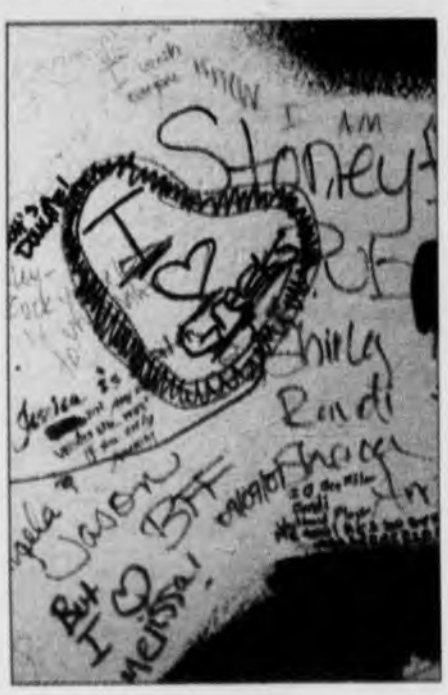
There was no shortage of quality material, but the language and subject content were – more often than not – too racy for the newspaper.

My personal favorite was in the basement of Dickens hall in the big stall. It pointed to a hole in the wall and told a specific group of people to place their members in it.

The post made me realize the two greatest aspects of bathroom graffiti.

The first thing I have to wonder when I read them was what the desired reaction the artist wishes to conjure when his work is first seen by the bathroom patrons. Does the artist really expect men to follow his directions? Do those who write phone numbers really expect to be called?

The other wonderful aspect of America's long underrated art form is that it knows no bounds. While it is difficult to pinpoint exactly who makes the art on the walls, we can use our context clues to get a better idea of where they come from.



All in all, bathroom art is a genre that shows no signs of going anywhere. If the scuffs and scratches on stall walls are any indication, janitors and maintenance men will be pestered with the graffiti for years to come.

Eric Davis is a senior in print journalism. Please send comments to edge@spub.ksu.edu.

Lisle Alderton | COLLEGIAN

Bathroom art covers stalls in several popular Aggieville bars. Often this form of expression is crude, but in its own way can be charming and witty.

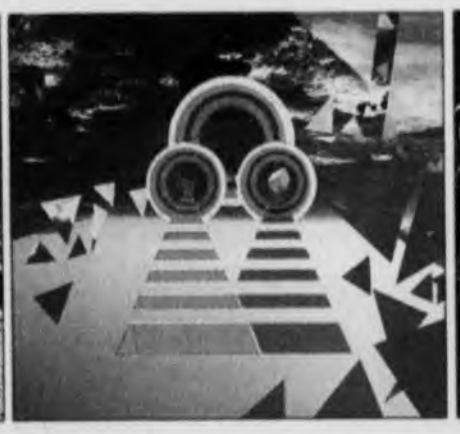
MUSIC REVIEW

Clinic, Drive-By Truckers produce great albums of 2008



Reviews by Mark Sibilla

"Do It"

On this Liverpool quartet's fifth album, Clinic mines the same sounds found on previous albums, creating an album that is full of many great moments but not many surprises. However, when a band's sound is so distinct to begin with – merging such disparate genres as Krautrock, doo-wop, punk, hard bop and rockabilly, just to name a few – one can't blame the band for sticking with what works. On "Do It!," Clinic offers another 30-minute album that slowly expands the band's sound. Highlights include the acoustic guitar romp, "Tomorrow;" the menacing, slow-burning "Corpus Christi;" the soulful "Emotions;" and the dark, atmospheric "Mary and Eddie." While "Do It!" explores familiar territory, it is hardly the sound of Clinic becoming stagnant; it is instead another solid album from one of the most interesting bands of the decade.

"Street Horrsing"

Fuck Buttons – the Bristol, England experimental music duo composed of Andrew Hung and Benjamin John Power – formed in late 2004 and created abrasive noise music, but as the band evolved it began to mix prettier sounds into its music and added more structure and melody to the compositions. Most of the six compositions on "Street Horrrsing" mix sweet, dreamy melodies with harsh climaxes that evoke such bands as Spacemen 3, Prurient, Black Dice and My Bloody Valentine. The tracks seamlessly ebb and flow into one another creating one 50-minute-long piece that shifts moods and styles with each new track. From the twinkling synths and pulsing drone of "Sweet Love for Planet Earth" to the drum circle chants of "Ribs Out" and the thudding drum-machine, chugging synth and distorted screams of "Bright Tomorrow," Fuck Buttons have created a noise album that is surprisingly accessible and is an excellent introduction to ground-breaking underground music.

"Brighter Than Creation's Dark"

"Brighter Than Creation's Dark" is Drive-By Truckers' seventh album and is the first album to be released since Jason Isbell – one-third of the Truckers' writing team – departed the band to pursue a solo career. Isbell's absence is hardly felt as Patterson Hood and Mike Cooley, along with new songwriter Shonna Tucker, have created a sprawling 75-minute, 19-track album that explores with compassion and empathy folks who are trying to make sense of an increasingly chaotic world. The songs explore characters as individualistic as a newly deceased man who is concerned about what will happen to his family ("Two Daughters and a Beautiful Wife") to an alcoholic father ("Daddy Needs a Drink") to a man trying to hold on to a piece of the American dream ("The Righteous Path") to a recently returned soldier who can't shake the memories of the horrors of war ("That Man I Shot") and an illegal gunrunner running short on options ("Checkout Time in Vegas"). The Drive-By Truckers continue its streak of brilliant albums with its latest album full of Southern-fried songwriting and guitar-fueled thunder, creating one of 2008's best albums so far.

Shomarka O.Y. Keita's anticipated lecture, "The Misconception of Human Variation as Race," will be at 3:30 p.m. Thursday in the K-State Student Union Forum Hall.

A significant misconception in Western society, which has caused years of racial discrimination and oppression, is that certain races have major biological differences. Combining his background in biology and anthropology, Dr. Shomarka O. Y. Keita, will address this fallacy Thursday.

"He looks at how people have assumed that there are major biological differences between groups," said Torry

Magazine editor, administrator combine for 2 decades of Senate help

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A glance around the Big 12 Room in the K-State Student Union during Student Senate meetings reveals two middle-aged men who sit among K-State's Student Governing Association.

One man has sat in the exact same spot for more than 15 years, while the other man sits somewhere new each week. One is a magazine editor and a journalist at heart, while the other maintains a steady schedule of meetings on a dry-erase board in his Anderson Hall office.

Tim Lindemuth and Bill Muir serve as faculty representatives for Student Senate. Lindemuth and Muir combined have more than 20 years experience as Faculty Senate representatives for Student Senate. Both men share a similar appreciation for their fraternal organizations and students, but they also have different personalities and organizational styles.

FROM STUDENT SENATE TO 40,000 ALUMNI: TIM LINDEMUTH

Tim Lindemuth's desk in the K-State Alumni Center is littered with K-State news. Newspaper and magazine clippings, press releases, magazine proofs and reporter's notebooks with story notes surround Lindemuth as he works as the editor of K-Stater magazine, which is published quarterly for K-State Alumni Association members.

In 2003, Lindemuth responded to a Faculty Senate e-mail that sought a volunteer for a faculty representative in Student Senate. Since then, Lindemuth has volunteered with each new Faculty Senate president to serve in the position, he said.

Lindemuth said he has learned a significant amount about student issues and student life as a faculty representative. Student Senate also helps Lindemuth with his role as K-Stater editor, he said.

"I have to be the eyes and ears to 40,000 readers of the magazine, so I get a side benefit to just help me in my daily job," Lindemuth said.

Each week, Lindemuth sits somewhere different at Student Senate meetings. He said he likes meeting different student senators and associating with them on a first-name basis.

"It's kind of like church – I don't sit in the same seat at church," Lindemuth said. "The room looks different from different sides where you're sitting. I think it's fine sitting in one seat, but I've always been somebody that reaches out – I suppose it's part of my journalism background to be reaching out."

Since 1993, Lindemuth has served as the K-Stater's editor; he also writes press releases and sends e-mails regarding K-State alumni club events. He received his master's degree in journalism at K-State in 1977. During the Bar-goers express support for cleaner, more accessible smoke-free bar

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kathouse Lounge, a fairly new addition to the Aggieville bar scene, offers a breath of fresh air for some non-smoking patrons.

Some bartenders and customers around Aggieville have praised non-smoking bars like the Kathouse, 1111 Moro St. Though traditionally smoky bars like Auntie Mae's Parlor are still packed on weekend nights, even their customers said they appreciate smoke-free bars.

Brian Berry, owner of the Kathouse, said when he opened the bar about a year ago, he wanted it to stand out.

"When I built this place, I wanted it to be outside the box," Berry said. "I wanted it to be smoke-free to set ourselves apart."

Berry said he designed his business to be neat and clean, and he built a patio outside the bar for people to smoke there. He occasionally has to tell smokers to step outside if they are unaware of the bar's rules, but the response has been mostly positive.

"Everybody's been so cool about it," he said.

Berry said even smokers like the Kathouse because they don't go home smelling like smoke. After being a bartender for nine years, he said he instantly notices the difference in atmosphere when he returns to some bars he used to frequent.

"I love going home not smelling like an ashtray," he said. "I feel like smoking puts a cloud on everything."

The Kathouse exceeded projected profits in its first fiscal year, Berry said. He said he thinks he has attracted people from other bars that allow smoke.

"We're offering something that's different, that smoking bars don't have," he said.

Bryan Smith, a bartender and assistant manager at Auntie Mae's Parlor, 614 N. 12th St., said he definitely prefers non-smoking bars. Waking up with a scratchy throat and clogged nose the morning after a night of work is annoying, he said, but he said the ambience keeps him at Auntie Mae's.

"I stay here just because of the atmosphere," Smith said. "If the smoking wasn't here, that would be better."

He said the smokiness of Auntie Mae's, which is 70 years old, was worse when the bar had carpet several years ago. Smith said he goes to non-smoking places when he isn't bartending.

"When I go out for drinks on my own, I usually go to the Kathouse," Smith said. "I definitely like to go in, have a drink and enjoy the atmosphere without the smoke."

Smith isn't the only Auntie Mae's fan who appreciates non-smoking bars.

Amelia Hartley, senior in elementary education and customer at Auntie Mae's, is a smoker, but likes the advantages of smoke-free atmospheres.

"I don't mind non-smoking bars because it keeps me

WEIRD NEWS

VARIOUS COLORED CHICKS ARRIVE IN NYC MAIL

NEW YORK — A ritzy high rise is a fashionable address for some recent arrivals to the city: a batch of tiny chicks.

The superintendent of the building near the United Nations headquarters said he uses a makeshift basement pen as a temporary home for mail-order critters that are destined for his upstate farm.

"I'm raising chickens because I plan to retire," the 62-year-old super, John Hyranyaz, told the New York Post for a story in Tuesday's editions.

On Monday, there were dozens of variously colored chicks, some yellow, some mottled, in the plywood-and-duct-tape pen.

But Hyranyaz denied raising animals at the building. "Everyone sees them, so they think I'm raising them," he said.

RISQUÉ EVENT RAISES MILLIONS

BEIJING — A Beijing auction raised a record 57.12 million yuan about $7.6 million for a mainland Chinese oil painting of men playing cards in their underwear, state media said on Tuesday.

"The Breeding Ground No.1," from the contemporary painter Liu Xiaodong's Three Gorges Series, was bought by a private buyer at the China Guardian 2008 Spring Auction, Xinhua news agency said.

The painting, eight-and-a-half feet high and 32.8 feet wide, was drawn in the Three Gorges area from 2005 to 2006, depicting 11 men in their underwear playing cards.

"I painted the Three Gorges three times. Every time was a personal improvement for me," said Liu, 45, a China Central Academy of Fine Arts graduate.

MAN ACCUSED OF THEFT, 2ND DEGREE CHARGE OF ENDANGERING A CHILD WHEN GIRLFRIEND APPLIES FOR JOB

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — Springfield police said a man tried to steal T-shirts from a store while his girlfriend was in another part of the business applying for a job.

Police said Monday that the 22-year-old was arrested on suspicion of stealing and second-degree child endangerment. Investigators said the suspect had been watching the woman's 8-month-old son and dropped the child when employees of Kohl's tried to hold him for police. Staff members who witnessed the theft said they caught up with the man in the parking lot and brought him back inside.

Employees called police, who caught up with the man near the store.

Police said the man is not the father of the baby, who was safely returned to his mother.

CITY COMMISSION

Commission discusses south redevelopment changes

By Mark Savoy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The south-end development, originally planned as an art district, is shaping up to be more of an entertainment district with a green emphasis.

SNEAD

City commissioners collaborated with some of the district's incoming companies last night to discuss the downtown development project.

Patrick Schaub of Bowman, Bowman and Novick architectural firm said the original outline called The Arts District was centered around the Discovery Center, with an added emphasis on the star bonds and the creation of a public park.

The commission voiced their unease.

"My concern is that we don't surprise residents like we did in the north end," said Commissioner Bob Strawn.

Commissioner Jim Sherow insisted the south end be developed with paths for bikers, residents and tourists who will pass through the area.

"I can assure that we can do everything from a master planning standing to encourage connectivity," said Brent Bowman, BBN architect.

Most of the concerns from the commission stem from Warren Theatres' pressure to rearrange south-end development to meet their needs. Ray Trail, a developer with Warren Theatres, said the proposed theater will be aesthetically appealing and feature 12 theaters, four of which will have balconies.

"We don't see this as an old-town theater, primarily in size," Trail said. "We want to build a theater that can truly capture the market potential here. If we sign a contract with you, it will be after we feel very assured that the theater will be very successful."

Trail also emphasized Warren Theatres' desire to work in conjunction with the redevelopment in the south end, but commissioners expressed skepticism about a struggling Warren Theatres in Wichita.

"We just opened a theater in Oklahoma City that has become the most popular theater in Oklahoma," Trail said. "We think [Manhattan] will be a great place to build a luxury theatre."

Commissioner Bruce Snead suggested the Warren Theatres' parking lot could benefit from a touch of green. He suggested that Photovoltaic Car Shade Canopies – solar powered roofs for cars – be installed to generate power, provide shade and provide cost efficiency.

"The parking lot is not an attractive feature, but it is a necessary feature to complement the area," Snead said. "[The canopies] could feed power to The Discovery Center and I think would plug into its theme of sustainability."

Bowman discussed the new vision for the park in the designs for the south end.

"The park itself, I am convinced, wants to be carefully planned out," Bowman said. "I think it is important that this park not be overplanned out. I think it needs to be this common green."

Strawn also asked questions about the proposed hotel on the east end of 4th Street. Strawn pressed representatives to describe what the hotel's backside would look like and to think about whether it would be an eyesore to the people on the west side of 4th Street.

The BBN architects said there was no backside to the hotel and residents on the west side of 4th Street would have a pleasant view of a hotel that featured a second entrance, a canopy and an attractive design.

Valid ID requirements necessary to prevent voter fraud

Christina Forsberg | COLLEGIAN

BRETT KING

While many U.S. citizens have their eyes and ears locked on their TVs for the recent "he said, she said, the old man said" battle for the presidency, the Supreme Court has helped states take a large step forward in preventing voter fraud in the 2008 elections.

In a 6-3 decision, the Supreme Court decided to reject a challenge to an Indiana law that required its citizens to show a valid form of identification – driver's license, passport, state ID – in order to vote. According to the Associated Press on April 28, there are 25 states that currently require citizens to present a valid ID before voting. The majority opinion, written by Justice John Paul Stevens, stated that the law has a "valid interest in protecting the integrity and reliability of the electoral process."

We are not talking about establishing a property requirement, literacy test, poll tax or any other major impediment to restrict voting. The goal of bringing "integrity and reliability" to our nation's elections does not seem to be a priority for members of the Democratic Party of Indiana, American Civil Liberties Union or other civil rights groups, though. Rather, these groups feel Indiana is forcing the poor, elderly and minorities away from the ballot box.

Ken Falk, legal director of the ACLU of Indiana, as reported by the Associated Press on April 28 said that the court was "willing to burden tens of thousands of eligible voters who lack a government-issued identification while accepting at face value Indiana's unsubstantiated claim of voter fraud."

The problem with his argument, though, is the fact that Indiana provides free IDs to citizens who do not have a driver's license.

According to CNN's Web site on April 28, since the law requiring voters to present an ID has taken effect, voter turnout in the state of Indiana has actually increased by two percent. It's a strange concept to think about – more legitimacy in elections brings more people to the voting box. Citizens are more inclined to vote when they feel their vote is counted and matters in the long run.

After the Democratic Party's claims of voter fraud in many elections – including the 2000 presidential election - any individual with at least a small amount of common sense would think helping to curve voter fraud would be a good course of action.

Asking for ID is not a burden for voters. Citizens are already asked for identification when buying tobacco or alcohol or applying for jobs. With this track record of ridiculous claims, we could soon hear that requiring identification is the reason we have unemployment in this country.

Having eligible citizens voting in elections is essential to the progress of our republic, but to encourage participation, voters must feel their vote matters and won't be canceled out by those attempting to commit voter fraud.

Military draft unlikely based on historical evidence

GRADY BOLDING

For the past few decades, the phrase "military draft" has been a verbal taboo in the U.S. But with the war in Iraq showing bipolar results and the possible threat of U.S. military conflict with Iran on the horizon, the phrase continues to pop up every now and then.

Of course, I find the odds of reinstating the draft to be miniscule. But to some, the idea is not as farfetched.

Blogger Paul Abrams of the Huffington Post wrote in a March 1 post that Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., secretly plans on bringing back the draft if he wins the presidency. By way of rebuttal, McCain responded by citing his "confidence" that young Americans would be willing to volunteer in sufficient numbers without a draft. Abrams, as a way to justify his argument, used the fact that the number of said volunteers is not at a sufficient level.

"He will not tell you this, but here is the answer: He will have to call for a military draft – period," Abrams wrote. "No, McCain is not joking about his war policies. He just will not tell the truth about the implications."

The idea is scary, no doubt. Of course, I remember hearing the same threats in 2003, just after the United States invaded Iraq.

It's 2008, and I'm still waiting for a draft to happen.

Fortunately, the odds of such an event occurring are very minimal, if you look at a few details.

One of the greatest privileges we have as U.S. citizens is the fact that our armed forces are based solely on volunteer service. For the past few decades, American youth have enjoyed the luxury of knowing they do not need to enlist in the armed forces if they do not wish. All that's asked in return is male registration for the Selective Service, just in case.

It wasn't always like this.

I'm sure we've all heard of the draft controversy during the Vietnam War. Every college campus from Maine to California was nearly in flames with young men avoiding the winds of war. Jump ahead a few decades, and one will find a CNN poll from Aug. 9, 2006, showing 60 percent of Americans disapprove of the current war in Iraq. Just the idea of bringing back the draft would be risky for anyone in this government to handle.

Of course, there are a few oddballs out there.

In November 2006, Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., announced on CBS News' "Face the Nation" that he would introduce legislation for the conscription of men and women between 18 and 42 years of age.

"There's no question in my mind that this president and this administration would never have invaded Iraq," Rangel said, "if indeed we had a draft and members of Congress and the administration thought that their kids from their communities would be placed in harm's way."

The Universal National Service Act of 2007, or HR 393, was introduced to the House of Representatives in January of that year. The Web site GovTrack.us shows the bill gained only two co-sponsors and remains under the category "Introduced" to this day. In other words, it's dead.

So that was the end of Chuck Rangel's draft crusade. Finally, with sugar on top, former Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld stated the following before Congress in June 2005:

"There isn't a chance in the world that the draft will be brought back," he said.

See? Even the most conservative people in the government disagree with the idea of bringing back the draft.

So, looking at these factors, there really is nothing to worry about when the draft is mentioned. It's been on the minds of some politicians and many males throughout the United States for some time. However, talk is likely as far as the idea will get.

And if any candidate for president risks the return of conscription, the fallout will more than likely hurt them worse than us. History promises us that.

TO THE POINT

K-State should respect lectures

Seniors and juniors at K-State have had the opportunity to see what most college students in the U.S. never get the chance to witness. Two U.S. presidents, two defense secretaries, three foreign ambassadors, one of the most influential foreign presidents of the 20th century in Mikhail Gorbachev, and a slew of other top newsmakers and industry leaders.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The Landon Lecture Series is one of the most foremost lecture series in the U.S. – not just at a university. For more than 40 years, it has brought in the top political figures in the world, including the last six presidents at some point in their political careers.

Few students across the country have an opportunity to see these types of figures, especially for free. For example, the Dole Lecture Series at the University of Kansas has attracted about one prominent speaker a year since 2004.

All five speakers have spoken at the Landon Lecture Series, including K-State Foundation professor Gen. Richard Myers.

Many students and faculty take the lecture series for granted. All of these lectures should fill McCain Auditorium or Bramlage Coliseum, not just when Presidents Clinton and Bush are here. All speakers are important to the world and have valuable information for our community.

Latino chapter 1 of few in Midwest

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Matt Castro | COLLEGIAN

Sigma Lambda Beta, the only Latino-based fraternity on campus, follows different rules and procedures from most fraternities. Beta works with the Multicultural Student Organizations and the Office of Diversity more than the IFC.

In talking about his college experiences, Clemente Jaquez-Herrera said Sigma Lambda Beta, a Latino-based fraternity, gave him a sense of belonging on K-State's predominately white campus.

"I joined as a freshman, and [the fraternity] gave me the tools and guidance I needed to be successful," Jaquez-Herrera, graduate student in architecture and Sigma Lambda Beta membership coordinator, said. "The idea of belonging to a group willing to help me was the main attraction."

According to the fraternity's Web site, Sigma Lambda Beta was founded in 1986 by Baltazar Mendoza-Madrigal, who saw the need to create a fraternity to emphasize Latino culture.

K-State's chapter, founded in 1994, was one of the first chapters in the Midwest, said Miguel Viruete, president of the K-State chapter.

"Most of the other Latino frats are from the West and East coasts, so the Midwest is a little isolated when it comes to that," Viruete, junior in sociology, said.

SMALL IN NUMBERS

The fraternity has about 6-12 members each year, with 2-3 new members joining annually, Jaquez-Herrera said. With few members, the fraternity's brothers said they get to know each other better and grow closer together.

Feeling comfortable provides the confidence for people to step forward and take on more responsibilities, which is what the fraternity provides for multicultural students, said adviser Anita Cortez.

"It's important to have a place where you feel a sense of community where you find people that understand your culture," she said.

FITTING IN

In contrast to other fraternities that have a specific niche, Sigma Lambda Beta is the only Latino-based fraternity on campus.

Multicultural greek organizations fit somewhere in between the traditional greek and historically black greek organizations on campus, Viruete said.

"We're kind of in the middle," said Samuel Ornelas, senior in kinesiology. "We work with the [Multicultural Student Organizations] and the Office of Diversity more than we do with the Interfraternity Council."

Sigma Lambda Beta is a member of the National Association of Fraternal Latino Organization. However, there is no NAFLO chapter at K-State, so to be an active organization on campus, the group joined IFC.

"Technically, we are under the Interfraternity Council because at this point there is nobody else," Ornelas said. "However, we don't go to their meetings and don't participate in some of the things that IFC puts on."

The fraternity also participates in activities with the MSOs and Office of Diversity.

"Everything is pretty limited – we're pretty independent," Ornelas said about falling under a council. "We choose to be that way, it's not that we're forced to be that way."

Brandon Cutler, IFC adviser, said the council doesn't work directly with Sigma Lambda Beta.

"IFC does not advise to any groups that aren't part of North American Interfraternity Council," Cutler said.

Though the fraternity does not fit in the mold of social greek fraternities or historically black fraternities, its members have made an effort on K-State's campus to make people aware that they do not exclude anyone from membership.

"It's not strictly Latino-Hispanic; it's a multi-cultural organization," Viruete said. "It's Hispanic-based, but we have a lot of Asian and Pacific-Islander members. We don't only recruit towards Hispanics."

REACHING OUT

Sigma Lambda Beta also works to help undocumented residents by supporting and creating awareness of the Dream Act, which works to get residents who are not yet citizens in-state tuition to attend college.

"It has a big effect," Viruete said of members' who work with the Dream Act.

In the fall, members set up tables for people to sign a petition in support of the Dream Act, he said.

Jaquez-Herrera said the Dream Act is beneficial because it targets people who want to give back to the community and better themselves but cannot because they do not have the documentation.

Getting documentation is a life-changing experience, said Jaquez-Herrera, who emigrated from Mexico to the United States at age 6.

"I came here as an immigrant and now I am becoming an architect because I got legal documentation," he said.

The fraternity also established a scholarship for a student who is an immigrant to attend K-State.

Sigma Lambda Beta does not have an official house, but the funds saved from not having a house are used to decrease members' payments and give back to the community. No chapter in the nation has a house, Ornelas said.

"When you do those kinds of things, it's for our personal development," he said. "It gives an idea of where the needs are in the community."

NFL Draft order means nothing

OWEN KENNEDY

ESPN is the Wikipedia of television. Any time a college student is bored and on the Internet, he or she usually visits the free encyclopedia Web site, not with any specific intention, but just to pass the time. Sports enthusiasts do the same with ESPN – any time we're bored and watching TV, we flip to the 24-hour sports network to fill the void left by the uninteresting programs on cable. But by watching ESPN, we start to believe the unbelievable and the ridiculous.

ESPN's obsession with telling viewers which athletes to support, which ones to follow and which ones to hate has led to our constant bombardment of being told how to feel.

This was evident during last weekend's NFL Draft. Talk of "game changers" and "difference makers" make any football fan salivate at the idea of watching these titans of the turf hit the field in August.

Sports analysts talked for months about Darren McFadden, Matt Ryan and Glenn Dorsey, about how great they are and how great they will be. But there are no guarantees in pro sports. In 1998, former Kentucky quarterback Tim Couch was drafted with the first-overall pick in the draft by the Cleveland Browns.

ESPN's analysts praised Couch, just like they do for every big conference QB, but he did little to nothing in his stint in the NFL and was released last fall by Jacksonville, according to Yahoo! Sports. The player who won the starting job is David Garrard – a quarterback drafted in the fourth round of the draft in 2002.

The list of busts and beauties goes on: Ki-Jana Carter and Ryan Leaf were touted out of college and drafted first and second, respectively, but did nothing in the pros.

Tom Brady and Terrell Davis were both drafted in the sixth round of different years, but went on to win multiple Super Bowls and should one day join the other greats of the game in the Hall of Fame.

It is examples like this that meant I didn't cry when Jordy Nelson wasn't drafted in the first round on Saturday, because draft order means nothing. Former Wildcat cornerback Terence Newman was drafted fifth overall in 2002 and went to the Pro Bowl earlier this year, but Mark Simoneau wasn't drafted until the third round in 2000 and has had nothing less than a great career.

So, who cares if K-State had fewer players drafted than the other Big 12 school in Kansas? And who cares if Aqib Talib was drafted ahead of Nelson? ESPN wants us to think a player can't succeed if he isn't drafted in the first hour or first day of the draft. Nelson will be fine, and Talib will probably get in trouble for substance abuse – again.

ESPN's talking heads don't know what they're talking about this time, and they rarely do. They think they know what's best for fans and which players will be superstars.

They tell us McFadden will be the second coming of Marcus Allen and that he will be the next big thing. But they also thought that about Rush Limbaugh.

K-State baseball coach Brad Hill said he came to the Wildcats baseball program because of the school's commitment to success throughout the athletic department.

Baseball coach leads with commitment, adaptation

By Ryne Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

During baseball practice last Thursday, coach Brad Hill stood stoically in the light rain, staring at his players as they took swings inside the home plate batting cage. He said something every now and again, and the players responded by jogging to different positions on the field.

Hill moved to his office after practice and took off his hat. His hair stuck straight up, in a kind of flattop manner, but he had a smile on his face. It was time to answer some questions about K-State's upcoming opponent, the powerhouse Texas Longhorns.

When asked if Texas was having a down year – a regular in the top 10, the Longhorns were ranked No. 25 going into their games with the Wildcats – he answered with respect, saying Texas never has a down year.

He then talked about his time at K-State and why he came here. As Hill spoke, he repeated one word several times – commitment.

"They want to be successful across the board," Hill said of the K-State athletics department. "Obviously, football and basketball are tremendously important, but they've also put a big commitment into the other sports."

On his office wall he has a framed plaque that says, "To be a great athlete, it takes commitment."

Hill has shown commitment to his players in his will to win, even if it meant changing to fit the game.

"Throughout the five years he's been here, he definitely adapted," said senior Brett Scott, who has been with Hill during his entire coaching tenure at K-State. "The game is always changing, he's always learning about the game, about our players and our style. He's always adapting and getting better himself."

When asked to describe the coach, Scott said he was "hard working and dedicated."

While Scott has been around Hill for a long time, some of the freshmen have only had this year to see him in action, which gives them a different view.

Freshman Thomas Rooke was recruited by Hill out of Spring, Texas, last year to become a pitcher for the Wildcats. He said Hill isn't always serious and can crack a joke, which Rooke said made Hill a "wise guy."

"He was very forward," Rooke said, recalling what Hill was like during recruiting. "He told me what he wanted and what I was going to do here. He told the truth on playing time. He was just very forward and told me what he wanted."

Still, Hill has seen his young team – the Wildcats only had two seniors last year and only have five this year – hit rough times this season. K-State is 20-23 overall and 6-12 in the Big 12 Conference after going 34-24 last season, one win away from the single season win record for K-State.

"We haven't been where we wanted to be," Scott said, sounding like his coach. "So it is always about that constant improvement – always try to improve upon yesterday and make tomorrow better."

Though K-State has struggled this season, the players in the program said they still feel like Hill has brought a different feel to K-State. A perfect example of this came on April 26, when K-State beat Texas in Manhattan for the first time since March 22, 1998. Junior Byron Wiley said after the game, "Times are changing."

And those times are changing under Hill's ever-watchful eye.

Wildcats shock ranked Shockers squad 3-2 in Wichita

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team's trip southeast to play No. 8-ranked Wichita State couldn't have turned out any better as the Wildcats were able to hold on to an early lead and upset the Shockers, 3-2, Tuesday evening at Eck Stadium.

Wichita State (33-10) committed four errors in the game and was able to take the lead in the bottom of the first when Conor Gillaspie doubled off K-State starter A.J. Morris. Right fielder Ryan Jones, who had drawn a one-out walk, came around to score.

The Wildcats (21-23) then came back in the top of the second inning and scored on three consecutive singles off of Shocker starter Tyler Fleming by Jason King, Adam Muenster and Byron Wiley. However, K-State wasn't able to keep the lead as the Shockers came back in the bottom of the second and scored another run on an RBI single off designated hitter Andy Dirks.

The back-and-forth scoring continued as the Wildcats tied the game yet again when Justin Bloxom doubled down the right field line scoring Jordan Cruz. K-State then took the lead in the fifth inning on a couple two-out singles. A wild pitch by reliever Khol Nanney then advanced the runners, and an error by Dusty Coleman extended the inning and allowed Bloxom to score.

The Wildcats wouldn't relinquish their lead even though the Shockers threatened late in the game.

Daniel Edwards was in relief of starter Morris and allowed two batters to reach in the bottom of the eighth. Edwards then struck out Clint McKeever and Kenny Williams, Jr., to end the inning.

The last inning was similar to the eighth. The Shockers got the tying run on second base, but couldn't get anything out of it. The rest of the inning fell in place like the eighth with a pair of strikeouts ending the Shockers' chances to try and take the game to extra innings or squeze out a possible victory.

The Wildcats have a couple of days off before K-State travels to Columbia, Mo., to take on the 14th-ranked Missouri Tigers beginning Friday. The first pitch from Simmons Field is set for 6:30 p.m.

McKinney, Roland ink free-agent deals with Rams, Eagles, respectively

FILE PHOTO

KSTATESPORTS.COM

K-State defensive back Justin McKinney and linebacker Justin Roland each have signed free-agent contracts with NFL teams.

McKinney will join the St. Louis Rams, while Roland inked a deal with the Philadelphia Eagles.

McKinney, a senior from Sanford, Fla., was K-State's leading tackler this past season with 74 tackles and also had three interceptions, nine pass breakups, one forced fumble and one blocked punt.

In 2007, McKinney was named second team All-Big 12 from the league's coaches and honorable mention from the Associated Press while starting 25 of his last 28 games, including all 12 games in 2007.

McKinney finished his K-State career with 158 total tackles, six interceptions, 26 pass breakups and one kickoff return for a touchdown.

Roland, a tough, rugged linebacker who was named a team captain prior to the 2007 season, started all 12 games in 2007 and finished as the team's second-leading tackler with 70 stops.

A native of Ponca City, Okla., Roland finished his Wildcat career with 87 tackles in 24 games.

McKinney and Roland join Jordy Nelson and Rob Jackson, who were both selected in the NFL Draft over the weekend, as the latest Wildcats to join the national league.

Film, environmental panel encourage making community green

By Rebecca Perez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Community environmental leaders emphasized making K-State environmentally friendly through discourse, education and hard work at Tuesday night's movie presentation and panel discussion on the environment.

"Our campus is the common student," said Michael Bell, director of sustainability for the Student Governing Association. "If students think substainably, then it is transferred to our campus."

Bell, senior in architectural engineering and construction science major, helped bring the movie, "The 11th Hour," to K-State on Tuesday evening. The film was then followed by a panel of distinguished professors and environmental advocates.

The event was an opportunity to inform students about environmental issues.

When people understand that the environment is changing, they can then work toward making the it a better place, Bell said.

He said he is excited about the new sustainable organization coalition on campus because it allows all organizations on campus to work together to create a greener university.

Everything is in place to create a greener campus, but students have to know it's there, he said.

"The movie was enlightening because I haven't seen it before," said Harry Spencer, junior in history. "The movie really highlighted that consumerism is inhibiting our ability to move toward a green society.

"This movie was more to the point than Al Gore's 'An Inconvenient Truth,' and it had a stronger point. It showed the science of global warming for people who aren't scientists. It painted the whole picture better."

John Harrington, professor of geography, said he was dissappointed in the movie because it lacked maps and diversity.

"I think the panel of environmentalists in the movie needed more diversity," he said. "It was like a five-to-one ratio of men to women."

Harrington also said K-State received a D or D+ grade for environmentalism in a report he read and said he believes K-State needs more environmentalism on campus.

"What we need is a love of the planet," he said. "We need Gaiaphilia."

Bonnie Lynn-Sherow, associate professor of history, said in the panel that she thought the film did a good job of pointing out that people are the ones causing the environmental problem and said that "we can change it."

Lynn-Sherow gave an example of change when she told attendees that the citizens of Greensburg, Kan., are having a competition to make each home and business greener than the other.

The greening of an entire area in the United States is good news, said Jim French, a panelist from Oxfam America, because the carbon footprint in the United States per capita is currently 16 times greater than that of China, the biggest polluter in the world.

Linda Richter, an audience member, suggested attendees call their state representatives about coal-fired plants, which led Jim French to inform the audience of an April 30 rally on the statehouse lawn at 9 a.m. Wes Jackson of The Land Institute in Salina said there will be a two-hour program on Frontline, a PBS news program, about the issue on April 30 as well.

"We are a keystone state in the fight against carbon," Jackson said. "Coal-fired plants are not favored by 61 percent of the Kansas population."

Jackson said the entire state is having an environmental civil war similar to the civil war over slavery and the new coal fire plant could become the issue for a new Bleeding Kansas.

"K-State has a legacy of not doing very much, but the campus has become awake," said Ben Champion, the moderator for the panel discussion and an instructor in geography at K-State. "It is a hopeful situation."

Chain stores, local shops complement each other in Aggieville district

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Planet Sub, left, and Porter's Bar show the variety of chain and independent stores in Aggieville. Though local establishments might not flourish at first, places like Varney's Book Store has driven out several possibilities of a chain competitor in Manhattan, including Barnes & Noble.

Dotting the streets of Aggieville, locally owned shops and nationally recognized chain stores lure in customers, each striving to succeed in Manhattan's economy by competing with and complementing each other.

While Aggieville's chain stores might seem like a threat to local shops because of their success and well-known names, Manhattan shoppers are constantly looking for stores that are different to the town, said Bernie Hayen, the City of Manhattan's director of finance.

"Mom-and-pop type operations may not do quite as well at first, but most of them definitely pave their way quickly here," he said. "Unique local establishments do very well in Manhattan. Chains may be better recognized and put a lot of money into the economy, but I wouldn't say they are necessarily much better off than local stores."

Hayen said some managers of widely recognized national chains have been skeptical about opening stores in Aggieville because of the competition they would face with local stores.

"Barnes and Noble didn't want to come in to Manhattan because they didn't want to compete with Varney's," Hayen said. "They know that our famous local shops can be a threat because of their popularity with Manhattan residents."

Many small shop owners in Aggieville said they think they are doing well and feel financially safe in their location. Sara Meyer, co-owner of Zotcis Attire, 1203 Moro St., said opening her local shop was a great decision.

"I think my store does really well in comparison to chain stores," she said. "We have really unique stuff and it's not high-priced, which sets us apart from chain stores in the mall. Local stores allow for more creativity, too. I'll come in sometimes and the whole floor will be changed. If you work for Gap stores, for instance, you have to follow how the corporation wants everything to be done."

Meyer said her love of fashion and desire to have her own business prompted her to open the store in March 2002. She also said she thinks locally owned shops are more personal than chain stores and have a more comfortable environment for their customers.

"In local stores, you know who the owners are, and in corporations or chain stores, you don't," she said. "Owning a local shop is what helped me be successful, because my girls know who they're working for, and they're not just putting a buck in some unknown person's pocket. It's a lot of fun having a local store in Aggieville."

Many managers of chain stores in Aggieville said they are satisfied with how their businesses are doing as well by supporting the neighboring local shops.

"Chains just have their systems set in place to help with how things are run," said Jarod Laudemann, general manager of Aggieville's Chipotle. "The procedures they have are already set. It's hard to say whether another chain or local store in Aggieville would do better, though. There are a lot of chains [that] go bankrupt, and if you have the right person opening up a local store, you can do very well."

Hayen said there is no clear way to measure whether opening a local or chain store in Aggieville is more fiscally responsible.

"It just depends on the retailer and the type of market they're in," he said. "If I were a businessperson looking at Manhattan as an economy and had to pay a franchise fee for opening a chain store as opposed to starting my own business, I wouldn't be afraid to open up under my local banner."

Hayen said there are multiple advantages to owning both chain and local stores. He said owners of chain stores get the advantage of instant name recognition.

"People almost always remember their experiences at chains as good ones," he said. "And so they take advantage of that national recognition and tend to look for those chain stores, no matter where they are in the country."

Hayen also said though local stores don't have instant popular name recognition, they have original qualities that customers remember if the experience was a positive one.

"Local shops lose that national chain recognition, but if it's a good experience, people almost always tend to go back," Hayen said. "They also have a special unique quality, and customers think they can't get that experience anywhere else. So if they go to a great local store in Aggieville, the next time they'll come back to Manhattan, they'll tend to return to that local store."

Hayen said he thinks Aggieville's economy would prosper equally as well if another chain or local shop opened its doors.

"I think we could do just as well with either," he said. "We have enough examples that say that's probably true."

Big Momma's house

New restaurant claims to offer bigger burgers

Robin Farah, waitress for Big Mamma's Grill, serves a customer "The Classic" burger Tuesday evening. Farah has been working at Big Momma's since it opened March 17.

Big Momma doesn't want anyone to go home hungry. That's why Big Momma's Grill, located inside PJ's Pub, strives to serve the biggest and juiciest burgers in Aggieville. Its slogan is: "If you can't go home, come to Big Momma's."

Owner Dusty Garner is committed to feeding Manhattan's biggest appetites. With bottomless fries and free meals for employees, he said he'd rather people take home too much food than not have enough.

"I wanted to make all the food bigger than any other establishment in Manhattan," Garner, sophomore in political science, said. "If you leave hungry, it was because you weren't brave enough to ask for more."

All the burgers, several of which are made with two-thirds of a pound of beef, are served with bottomless fries, and have names like "The Guadalajara," "Jäegerburger," and "The Blue Boy." The menu describes its fare with cheeky references to Garner's personal preferences for food and otherwise. The Guadalajara, for example, which costs $8.50, is described as "one of Momma's favorite Latin lovers." The Jäegerburger features a "hefty helping of Momma's secret Jäegermeister BBQ sauce," and costs $9.50. The Blue Boy was "named for one of Momma's favorite dens of iniquity in Amsterdam," and is $8.50.

The appetizers and desserts have similar tongue-in-cheek descriptions. Patrons can start their dinner with Momma's pile o' rings, fried cheese or fried stuffed mushrooms. But, according to the menu, "Momma's favorite part of the meal is the big finish," which includes desserts like fried twink's and ho's (fried Twinkies and HoHos), Momma's Knockers (cherry-filled chocolate cake), and fried cheesecake bites. All of these items cost about $5.

Big Momma's business has been increasing since its opening on March 17, Garner said.

"I'm starting to see faces I don't recognize," he said. "I feel that's a sign of success."

Jackie Dedonder, senior in history, said a friend recommended the grill, so she ordered the classic cheeseburger on her first visit.

"It was really huge and high quality," Dedonder said. "The veggies were really fresh, which was noticeable. These burgers are a force to be reckoned with."

Garner said he strives to get his ingredients from local producers.

"Farm-fresh produce is important to me. I support the local economy as much as I can," he said.

Specialty drinks are also available, like Adult Cherry Limeades, Bloody Marys, Wildcat Tea, Cosmos and Martinis. Most of these drinks cost about $6.

Big Momma's Grill is located inside PJ's Pub on Laramie Street in Aggieville. PJ's Pub is a music venue that is host to several local bands and various national acts as well.

Big Momma's, 1129 Laramie St. inside PJ's Pub, is known for its large burgers and ability to satisfy the hunger of all customers.

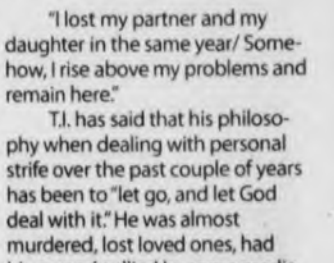
T.I. RELEASES 'NO MATTER WHAT,' FIRST TRACK FROM PAPER TRAIL ALBUM



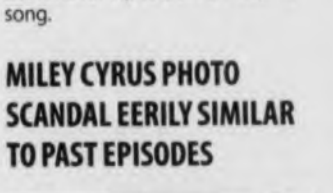
"I lost my partner and my daughter in the same year/ Somehow, I rise above my problems and remain here."

T.I. has said that his philosophy when dealing with personal strife over the past couple of years has been to "let go, and let God deal with it." He was almost murdered, lost loved ones, had his named sullied by some media outlets and still faces a prison sentence for weapons charges. Professionally, though, the man still has the respect of his peers, the adoration of the fans and, equally important, his work in the studio has been as accurate as a Chris Paul pass.

The King of the South has his mind right. He's guilty of grand theft after stealing the show from Young Jeezy and Lupe Fiasco on a remix of Lupe's "Superstar." On that track, Tip batted cleanup, admonishing snitches while flipping Rodgers and Hammerstein's "Do Re Mi." He is also shining on his unofficial remix of Usher's "Love in This Club," which immediately graduated from an Internet leak to radio rotation.

But now, as he promised MTV News just a few weeks ago, it is time for Tip to deliver his own song.

MILEY CYRUS PHOTO SCANDAL EERILY SIMILAR TO PAST EPISODES



For teen pop fans, it's déjà vu all over again: Young pop starlet rises to fame on the wings of virginal Disney (or Nickelodeon) goodness, only to shock us when she suddenly goes bad.

But for some reason, the firestorm over the seemingly topless photos of the squeaky-clean Miley Cyrus in the upcoming issue of Vanity Fair have risen to a new level of hysteria, much of it, admittedly, fanned by the media.

All this hullabaloo begs the question: Haven't any of you been paying attention over the past few years?

LIL WAYNE'S 'LOLLIPOP' #1; ARTIST GRATEFUL FOR GROWING POPULARITY

What are they gonna say now?

Since Lil Wayne was seemingly reborn as a hip-hop artist some two-plus years ago on his way to becoming the Hottest MC in the Game, criticism about his studio efforts has been as scarce as Denver Nuggets playoff wins. But one fact his detractors always point out is that his ascension has been mostly on guest appearances and not his own records.

Well, well, well, it has all come together for Weezy: He has the #1 video on "TRL" and the #1 song on Billboard's Hot 100 with "Lollipop."

Lil Wayne told us Monday that his friends and fans are more excited than he is, but he's grateful nonetheless. "I don't feel like nothing," he said on the phone from Miami. "I feel like I ain't got nowhere yet. I ain't do nothing yet, actually. But I'm trying to live off everybody's happiness."

KING'S KITCHEN

Fried chicken great snack for stressful final weeks of classes

BRETT KING

Finals are around the corner, which means many students will be cramming in the library into the wee hours of the morning. Many will come home tired and hungry, feeling it is too late to start cooking a large meal.

As one of those night owls who might not eat as well as I should during the weeks leading up to finals, I have made the Sundays before "dead week" and finals week my time to prepare an easy meal that will keep throughout the week.

Though there is a stigma surrounding fried foods, it does have the advantage of lasting longer than typical leftovers – about a full week – which means it is a perfect snack for those late night cravings.

The best part about shopping for chicken in a grocery store is being able to buy only the pieces you wants to eat. Personally, I love legs or thighs and grocery stores have packages of 10 to 15 already cut and ready to go for a low price.

This week we are making Sunday dinner the right way with some Spicy Southern Fried Chicken, so bring out the cast iron skillet and let's get cooking.

SPICY SOUTHERN FRIED CHICKEN

INGREDIENTS:

3 ounces Jack Daniels*
10-15 chicken legs or equivalent amount of pieces
1 sleeve of Saltine crackers
2 cups all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon black pepper
1 ½ teaspoons cayenne pepper
½ teaspoon paprika
½ teaspoon garlic powder
2 eggs
1 cup buttermilk
¼ cup hot sauce
Canola oil
* optional

DIRECTIONS:

Before I ever start to fry up chicken, I always pour myself a double Jack Daniels to sip on while making this meal. Remember, food and cooking are supposed to be fun.

Defrost the chicken pieces and set them aside. Out of the box of Saltine crackers, grab one whole sleeve and empty the crackers into a large plastic bag. With a rolling pin, grind the crackers into a fine powder and set aside.

Fill about one inch of a large cast iron skillet with canola oil and leave over medium-high heat. The oil will be ready when it reaches a temperature of 350 degrees.

Take a large brown paper grocery sack and place flour, cracker powder, black pepper, cayenne pepper, paprika and garlic powder inside. You can add more salt to the recipe, however, there should be plenty coming from the crackers.

In a large pie plate, crack the eggs, and add buttermilk and hot sauces; stir with a whisk until completely incorporated. This liquid should be orange because of the hot sauce.

Dunk chicken pieces into the liquid one time and place pieces in a brown sack. Shake bag with chicken inside for a good minute. Then take the chicken pieces back out and repeat the process one more time.

Once chicken is breaded, check the temperature of the oil and place the chicken in the skillet five pieces at a time. Cook for about 10-12 minutes on each side or until the chicken turns a rich golden brown color.

K-State's BRI nationally recognized as biosecurity training institute

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Biosecurity Research Institute will be nationally recognized by the National Biosafety and Biocontainment Training Program as an official "designated training facility."

The title will become official during a presentation Thursday at 11 a.m. in the BRI, which is also known as Pat Roberts Hall.

A plaque will be presented to the K-State facility by the NBBTP, which will be displayed for visitors to recognize its status as an officially designated training facility.

K-State can expect many national visitors to the facility for NBBTP training, said Scott Rusk, BRI director.

"It's all positive – it's the goal we set for ourselves to be leaders," Rusk said.

The NBBTP, a training program for people working in biosecurity research is an organization established through the National Institute of Health.

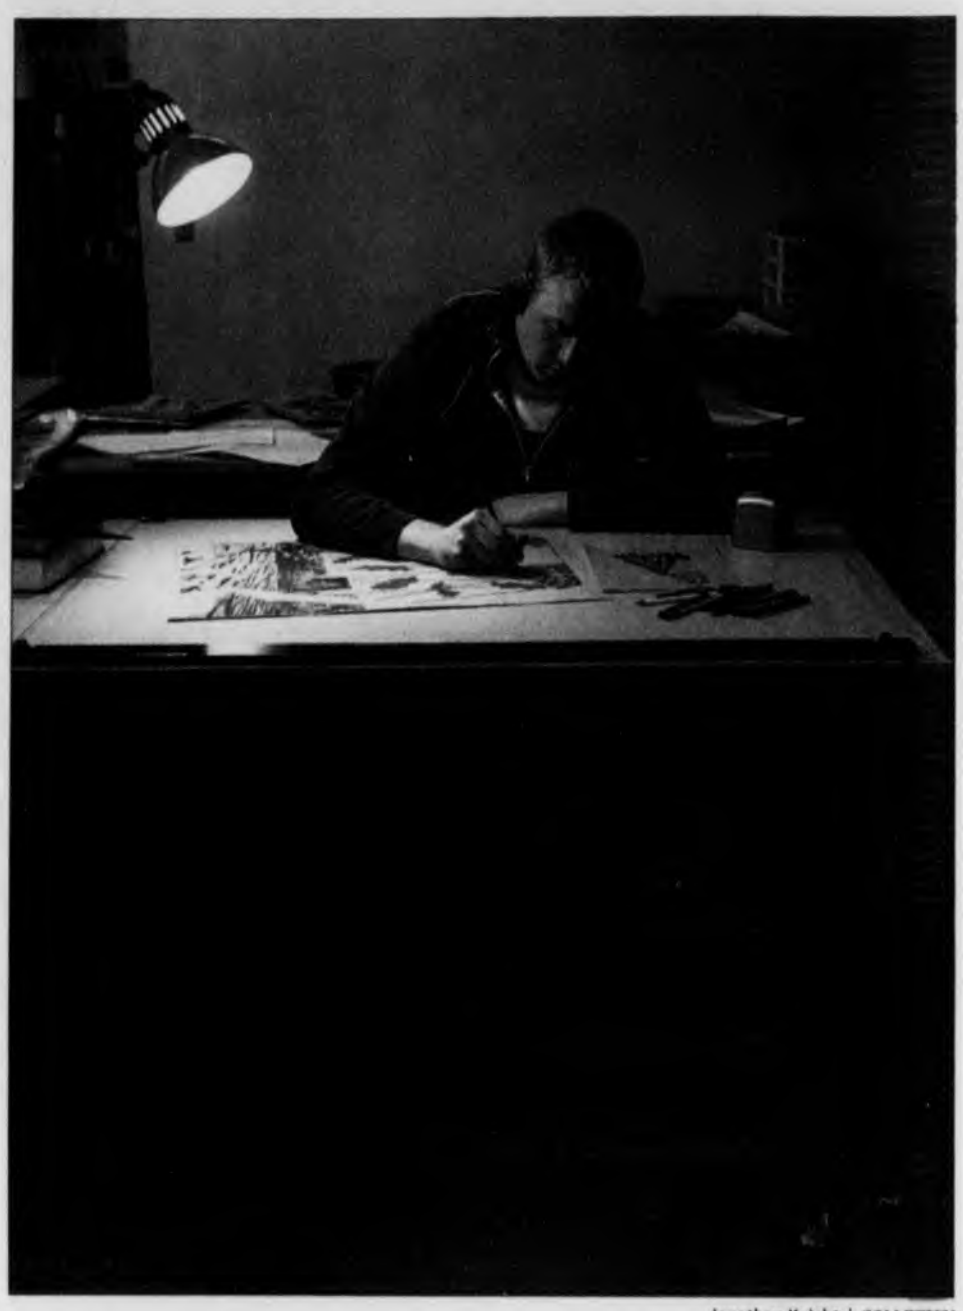
"They have identified us as one of their training facilities, so when they offer training, people will come from around the nation," Rusk said.

K-State's BRI is used for research on agricultural diseases that affect crops and animals, and Rusk said that would remain the institute's focus.

"Everything is the same; our mission and track for our research has not changed," he said.

K-State's BRI has three main goals, Rusk said. These include finding new vaccines for diseases affecting animals and crops, improving early disease detection, and developing foodborne disease medication. The research helps to make the national food supply secure.

K-State's BRI is different from any other university's BRI by accommodating research on food animals, food crops, and food processing under one roof, Rusk said.



"It sets us apart by recognizing K-State's leadership role and capacity in providing education and training," Rusk added.

The title will become official through a presentation Thursday at 11 a.m. in Pat Robers Hall, the Biosecurity Research Institute.

Union employee reflects on job

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cole McDaniel, junior in speech and business communication, is a fixture at the K-State Student Union bowling alley. As both a bowler and an employee, McDaniel spends a fair amount of time at the lanes.

The Collegian recently caught up with him to find out a little more about him.

How long have you worked in the Union?
Four years.

Why did you change to business communication as a major?
[Architectural engineering] was kind of hard. I don't know, no real reason. It seemed like the best fit.

What do you want to do after you get out of college?
Get a job and pay back my student loans.

When are you going to graduate?
Three semesters, four semesters? Depending on my course load and all that.

You work at the bowling alley– do you ever bowl?
Yes. I'm in two leagues and I practice once a week, sometimes. At least two, sometimes three times a week.

What is your high score?
300, twice. I was 16. I've got a 299, 11 in a row, then 9 in the last frame, a bunch of 279s. I also bowled club level in high school.

What is club level?
In 2004, [bowling] wasn't a state-wide sport in high school, and it was the first year that they tried it out as a club team. The year after that was the first time you could get a letter in it. That was in '05 they did that, and I graduated in '04.

Do you play video games at all?
Yes, we just bought Grand Theft Auto IV today.

How is it?
I played about an hour's worth. The graphics are crazy. There are headlights and when you hit a pole, the headlights go away. They also have a GPS where they draw a line for you [on the game map]. There is no load time. There is nothing. You turn the game on, and within a minute and a half, you're playing the game.

What do you think about foot-long Tuesdays being gone from the Subway restaurant in the Union?
I think it's a good idea for getting numbers in on a day-to-day basis. I don't like it because it increases the price that I have to pay.

What do you like to do when you're not at work?
I do enjoy bowling. I enjoy fishing, hanging out at the lake, getting my truck muddy and riding my bike.

Where do you ride your bike?
I have a Trek 4300. Linear trail mostly, and a mud trail down by the lake, east of the mall.

Do you play any sports?
I used to play basketball. I used to run track a long time ago.

HMS society to travel to Chicago, NYC

By Salena Strate
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Members of Hotel Management Society sampled bite-sized cheesecakes and mini-pizzas while questioning a restaurant professional for their year-end event Monday night.

Andrea Grier, HMS alumna and owner of Harry's Uptown and Howdy's restaurants, welcomed HMS members into her world. She explained the challenges of owning and managing a restaurant, spoke of previous work experiences and gave advice for future K-State graduates.

HMS is geared toward hotel and restaurant management students, but it is open to all majors. HMS was started in 1976 as a way for students to listen to professionals in their field. The 30-member group meets every other week in Justin Hall, and every meeting usually focuses on a speaker in the hotel or restaurant field.

"The contacts I can make through this, the leadership experience and exploring the industry are why I am involved," said Sandra Henke, HMS vice president and senior in hotel and restaurant management. "I think networking is the biggest benefit because all of our speakers are local."

Travel opportunities are some of the biggest benefits of HMS, Henke said. In the spring, HMS members travel to the National Restaurant Association Show in Chicago, and in the fall, they go to the International Hotel and Motel Show in New York City. Each semester, members must earn a certain number of points by completing service and catering hours to be eligible for these trips. During football season, HMS members work special white tent events.

Another event HMS members help with is the Traveling and Dining Auction. Every year hotel and restaurant management students help plan and carry out the auction. This year, they raised more than $24,000.

"All this goes back to the students for scholarships or to fund the HMS trips," said Candace Hufford, HMS member and senior in hotel and restaurant management. "With those trips, all the students have to pay for is their plane ticket. HMS takes care of hotel rooms and show tickets and all that money comes from the auction."

Hufford said she was proud of how far the auction has come because when it started 12 years ago, the students only raised $3,000.

Leigh Davison came to an HMS meeting her freshman year and is now the organization's president. She said she liked hearing from professionals about their real-life experiences.

"Just seeing how involved the students were inspired me to join HMS," said Davison, junior in hotel and restaurant management.

Davison said her biggest challenge this year has been trying to form a partnership with the K-State chapter of Club Managers Association of America. She said each group could learn from the other and offer resources in their fields.

"HMS is extremely involved on campus, and it is a great way to go to different professional meetings," Davison said.

putting the money on his personal credit card. A FedEx Kinko's internal investigation revealed Bailey had stolen about $9,000 over a six-month period, Nelson said. FedEx Kinko's had no comment about the arrest.

In another report, a gold 2001 Toyota Camry was stolen from 1413 Pierre St. The vehicle, valued at $8,000 was reported missing Sunday, RCPD Lt. Josh Kyle said. Kyle said the vehicle had been left unlocked.

Another theft occurred when a victim had a black wallet with a K-State powercat logo on the side stolen. The wallet contained various IDs. Also stolen was a bookbag with several textbooks, Kyle said.

LECTURE | Speaker to explain racial flaws

Dickinson, associate professor of women's studies.

Dickinson, who helped organize the event, said Keita uses science and applies it to anthropology to show there are no significant biological differences between racial groups.

"He basically has shown that there are no differences between groups that are so major that they can be called racial differences at all," she said.

Keita is an American biological anthropologist who received his medical degree from Howard University. He also has a doctorate from Oxford University in biological anthropology. With his background in science and anthropology, Dickinson said Keita has been able to use science and apply it to anthropology to draw strong conclusions from his findings.

"He challenges a lot of the racist assumptions that have been imbedded in biology to really get at what is really there," she said.

Dickinson said the multiple campus departments and organizations sponsoring Keita's visit have opened it to the community, billing the lecture as a "communiversity" event.

"Torry approached me a while ago about bringing this distinguished scholar that she knew to campus," said Rhondalyn Peairs, director of the Dow Multicultural Resource Center.

The DowMRC is an endowed unit of K-State Libraries and contributes funding for different events on campus. Peairs said the center was willing and happy to provide funding for the event because of the beneficial outcome for those in attendance.

"I thought it would be good to bring this speaker to really explain what race is," she said. "Oftentimes, people don't have a clear understanding of what race is as it pertains to genetics, biology and social construct – hopefully he'll clear up things for people."

from smoking too much," she said.

Hartley said she doesn't mind going outside to smoke.

"Honestly, I feel bad if people don't want to be around it," she said.

Jeremy Hostin, senior in broadcast journalism, is a doorman at Auntie Mae's. Though he doesn't smoke, Hostin said he is used to the smell, and it doesn't bother him.

"When you think of a bar, you think of drinking and smoking," Hostin said. "I don't think [other bars will prohibit smoking] anytime soon."

Kite's Bar and Grill, 615 N. 12th St., opened a non-smoking section last semester. Alex Crane, junior in interior design, has been a waitress at Kite's for about a year, serving mostly in the smoking section.

"I hate it," she said. "I don't think it's fair that I have to breathe in other people's smoke. I hate the bars at night for that reason."

She said she is embarrassed to see her boyfriend some nights after work because she smells like smoke.

Crane's friend Mallory Loudenback is a student at the University of Kansas. She said the smoking ban in Lawrence has been positive.

"It's been really nice having that law pass in Lawrence," she said.

She said she likes not having to wash her clothes after wearing them for only an hour when she goes out. She said people in Lawrence now go outside to smoke.

"It's not that far of a walk to sit outside," she said.

1970s, he served three years in the Army as a journalist after he was drafted in the Vietnam War.

To stay involved in other areas of campus, Lindemuth serves on the Board of Student Publications and also is the president of K-State's Alumni Fraternity Council. He is a Pi Kappa Phi alumnus, and in 2000, he was named K-State fraternity chapter adviser of the year. In 1996-97, he was named Pi Kappa Phi national adviser of the year.

In the Manhattan community, Lindemuth serves as president of the Manhattan Solar Kiwanis Club, president of the Eugene Field Neighborhood Association and vice president of the Coalition of Manhattan Neighborhood Associations.

Lindemuth walks to the Alumni Center twice each day from his Denison Avenue home. He said he enjoys entertaining, and he occasionally has lawn bowling and cookouts at his house.

Personal photographs and mementos appear on Lindemuth's office desk and bookshelves, including an incense burner from the 18 months he was stationed in Korea during the Vietnam War; photographs of his mother, who died of Alzheimer's disease in 2002; and a small glass display of roses from his mother's casket that he had preserved.

The bookshelf directly in front of his desk holds several printers' type letters with the quote that guides Lindemuth's life: "Don't give up the ship – sell it."

THE 'FACILITATOR': BILL MUIR

Bill Muir is a self-proclaimed "fire trap." At his Anderson Hall office, Muir "functions in piles" – city commission, Student Senate, scholarship and Council on Parking Activities papers form small piles on his desk and floor. He also has 3-ring binders with old Student Senate minutes and orange books with session laws from the Kansas legislative sessions.

Since June 1990, Muir has served as assistant vice president for community relations with the Vice President for Institutional Advancement office. He now serves on about 35 boards or committees.

A dry-erase board calendar on Muir's office wall allows him to plan six weeks in advance. Most of his meetings and commitments often take place at night, he said.

Vice president for institutional advancement Bob Krause appointed Muir as a faculty representative for Student Senate in October 1992. Muir shook his head when asked if he had planned to serve more than 15 years as a faculty representative.

"I have a weakness for doing everything in double digits," he said. "I get involved in something, and I just keep liking it and doing it and wanting to do more with it – suddenly it becomes 10, 15, 20 years."

In his numerous campus and community involvements, Muir said something new is always taking place, especially with new people and priorities. As people have learned Muir's name and that he could be helpful in providing past information about a committee, he said he sees himself as a "facilitator."

"No two meetings or no two weeks are ever the same," he said. "I don't have to try very hard to have new things happening – that's refreshing."

Each week, Muir arrives at least 30 minutes early before the Student Senate meeting, though he sits in an aisle seat in the Big 12 Room's center section every week.

"I might be in the same seat every week, but I move around a lot," he said.

Muir said he and senators often go out for drinks after meetings; he said surrounding himself with 18- to 22-year-olds helps keep him young.

For 36 years, Muir has served as Alpha Tau Omega chapter adviser, and he received K-State chapter adviser of the year in 1987-88 and 1997-98. He also enjoys traveling – a pin map at the top of his bookshelf showcases the states and countries he has seen.

"It shows me where I've been and where I've yet to go," Muir said.

A one-page, two-sided résumé in size-8 font records Muir's career and organization memberships, which includes a stint as assistant to the governor of Kansas from 1979-87.

"If I don't keep busy, someone will make sure I am," he said with a smile. "I can't say 'no.'"

Former NFL star helps expand state's testing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. – During his playing days, football was Jim Kelly's passion. Now, his passion is childhood diseases.

The pro football Hall of Fame quarterback joined Gov. Kathleen Sebelius and other state officials Tuesday in touting an expansion of the state's newborn screening program.

Starting July 1, all newborns will be screened for 29 diseases, an increase from the current four. Funding from the 2007 Legislature made the expansion possible, at a cost of $56 per child.

Kelly has been on a quest to get states to expand newborn screening since the discovery that his son, Hunter, was born with Krabbe leukodystrophy, an inherited, fatal nervous system disease. His son was diagnosed at age 4 months and lived until age 8, dying in 2005. Kelly created a foundation, Hunter's Hope, to find a cure and push states to expand screening.

"I'm going state to state to make sure these kids have a chance to dream," Kelly said. "This is my passion. This is my life."

Kelly said he always dreamed of playing ball with his son, who was born on his birthday, but never got the chance. He said had the disease been detected, it would have been possible to treat it, and Hunter would have had a good quality of life.

Since New York expanded its screenings from 11 diseases to 44, Kelly said one child with Krabbe's disease has been identified and is now living a good life. Kansas was one of seven states screening for less than 29 disorders, while Minnesota screens for 54.

Sebelius said Kansas will begin the screenings this summer and a report will determine how well the system is working, including follow-up visits with parents.

Republicans still pushing Sebelius on proposed coal plants near Holcomb

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. – Gov. Kathleen Sebelius promised to respond to a plan from legislative leaders for allowing two coal-fired power plants in southwest Kansas, but they worked Tuesday on multiple options to see that they're built.

Sunflower Electric Power Corp. wants to build the two plants outside Holcomb, in Finney County, but Sebelius' administration has blocked them since October over their potential carbon dioxide emissions. She has vetoed two bills to allow them and limit the power of the state's top environmental regulator.

Legislators planned to return Wednesday from their annual spring break, and clear the way for Sunflower's project tops leaders' agenda. Last week, House Speaker Melvin Neufeld and Senate President Steve Morris outlined a plan that they said represented their last offer of compromise.

Sebelius said she would respond during a Statehouse news conference at 9 a.m. Wednesday, an hour before lawmakers were to reconvene. Morris and Neufeld expected to meet with her before that event.

But Morris, a Hugoton Republican, and Neufeld, an Ingalls Republican, expected both chambers to attempt Wednesday to override the Democratic governor's latest veto, which occurred April 17.

And Neufeld said supporters of Sunflower's project are working on yet another proposal for getting the plants built.

"Until the last gavel comes down at the end of the session, I imagine we'll keep trying to find a way to do this," Morris said.

Sunflower and its allies need two-thirds majorities in both chambers to override a veto. They have always had more than enough votes in the Senate, but they have remained at least one vote short in the House.

Many legislators view the plants as economic development and important to meeting the state's future power needs, but others worry about their potential CO2 emissions. Many scientists link man-made greenhouse gas emissions to global warming.

Sunflower's supporters have tried different strategies to achieve the two-thirds margin in the House. They have added "green" proposals to the two bills that have passed, and they have worked to convince colleagues that helping Sunflower will make the state's business climate more certain.

"I'm feeling pretty good about it," Neufeld said of a potential override.

Rep. Joshua Svaty, an Ellsworth Democrat who has voted against the two bills sought by Sunflower and its allies, said he believes they have been several votes short in the House. He said legislators have voted enough on the issue that people are set in their positions.

"The word on the street is that they have the votes, but I still wonder, because it still seems like they're pretty active in corralling the votes," Svaty said.

The plan Morris and Neufeld outlined last week was developed with Sunflower, a sister company and a partner in its project. It would permit Sunflower to build two plants that are 14 percent smaller than the utility had proposed.

Lawmakers also would impose more-aggressive goals than previously approved for requiring utilities to develop wind farms and other renewable energy sources. Sunflower also would create programs to help consumers conserve energy and join an international registry tracking greenhouse gas emissions.

But the plan still would limit the secretary of health and environment's power, something Sebelius has said is unacceptable to her.

"Actually, there's more than one compromise being worked on," Neufeld said.

But he wouldn't discuss the specifics, telling reporters: "I don't want to mislead you, so I won't say anything. We're still working on the details."

Sebelius has proposed allowing Sunflower to build one plant, if it would commit to investing in new wind farms and starting conservation programs.

Sunflower rejected that plan in January, saying it wasn't workable. Its executives have said they are relying on their two out-of-state partners to help finance the project and therefore need to build two plants, with most of the new power initially going to those partners.

Rep. Pat Colloton, a Leawood Republican, said she would seriously reconsidered her past "no" votes because she worries an impasse will prevent any green legislation from passing and deny western Kansas additional generating capacity.

But she said Tuesday that she won't switch yet, even with the latest proposal from Neufeld and Morris.

Police arrest man on charges of rape

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Police arrested a man Tuesday in a case involving a rape that occurred last month, according to Riley County Police Department reports.

Lt. Kurt Moldrup said Darrius Johnson, 21, of 2215 College Ave., was arrested for the March 28 rape of a 20-year-old woman in the southwest part of Manhattan. The victim was known to Johnson, Moldrup said.

Johnson's bond was set at $50,000, according to police reports.

If you or anyone you know has been raped, you are encouraged to report it to the Riley Country Police Department at 785-537-2112.

Native American students share culture through display, crafts

Anne Collins, student records clerk at the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, works on a basket at the celebration of Native American heritage sponsored by the Native American Student Association in the K-State Student Union Courtyard on Wednesday.

By Jasmine Hammond
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The ancient artform of telling a story through basket-weaving is a centuries-old American Indian tradition, which was shared with K-State students and faculty Wednesday afternoon in the Union Courtyard.

The Native American Student Association, along with Diversity and Dual Career Development and the Office of Student Activities and Services, was host to its annual Native American Heritage Day.

The Union Courtyard was filled with tables displaying artwork, artifacts and music. One table in particular caught the eye of students.

Tarra Coons, an artist from White City, Kan., attracted a crowd to her table by teaching people how to make a Cherokee woven basket. She told a story about how basket weaving is a large part of the Cherokee nation.

"Baskets were used to carry, bury and haul anything," Coons said. "It is a big part of our civilization, and basket technology is a significant development in our history."

Coons' display was scattered with baskets and blankets she made herself.

"I learned to make baskets from Thelma Forest in 1980," Coons said. "After I learned, for 15 years, all I could think about was making baskets."

The Cherokee baskets are woven to symbolize the seven Cherokee clans, which are wolf, wild potato, paint, blue, long hair, bird and deer.

There are four steps in creating a basket, which incorporate the seven clans, the cross, the eye and the sun.

It starts by gathering seven weeded strands that represent the seven clans. Three of the seven strands are put on top of the remaining four strands that represent the cross.

While starting to weave the strands together, it forms into what looks like an eye that soon transforms into what looks like the sun. The strands should be moist to make it easier for them to be woven together, so dipping the basket in water is helpful, Coons said.

Coons said basket weaving is a passion for her, and one of her baskets has even appeared on the David Letterman Show.

Anne Collins, student records clerk in the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, said it was her second year attending the event.

"I've always been fascinated on how things have been made," Collins said. "I decided this year that I was going to make a bigger basket than last year."

Michael Hayden, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, presented the 151st Landon Lecture in McCain Auditorium on Wednesday afternoon. He is the first sitting CIA director to give a Landon Lecture.

CIA director stresses shift of global relations

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The director of the Central Intelligence Agency gave K-State and Manhattan community members a primer on the new frontier of international relations in the 21st century.

"In this new century, the world will be far more complex, and the capacity of others – both nation-states and non-state actors – to influence world events will grow," said CIA director Michael Hayden Wednesday at the 151st Landon Lecture in McCain Auditorium.

Dressed in his four-star general Air Force uniform, Hayden highlighted three global trends that CIA analysts will focus on in the coming years.

The first trend he mentioned was paying attention to the demographics of countries all over the world. He said while developed countries are aging and losing population, many poorer countries are expected to grow immensely. This would mean an influx of immigrants to developed countries and an increased chance of violence in the younger generation in their old and new countries.

Hayden emphasized learning about Middle Eastern and Asian cultures to build peaceful relationships worldwide in the 21st century.

"Receiving countries, of course, have much to gain from an influx of young workers ..." he said. "But social integration of immigrants will pose a significant challenge to many host nations – again boosting the potential for unrest and extremism."

Hayden's next two trends specifically mentioned one region on which the U.S. focused in the past – Europe – and one of the future – Asia.

K-State responds to national lending crisis

Many students across the country are having trouble receiving loans because of the recent lending crisis.

By Owen Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The financial lending industry has been severely affected by the numerous defaults on sub-prime loans and mortgages. The credit crunch has caused bank and other institutions that offer student loans to take action, and this is most commonly done by raising interest rates. Even K-State has had to make changes to the types of loans it offers.

The Office of Student Financial Assistance offers students the option of choosing two types of loans: Federal Direct Loans, which are funded and guaranteed by the federal government; and Federal Family Educational Loans, which are funded by the government but processed through private lenders. However, after this semester, the university will no longer offer Federal Family Educational Loans, said Larry Moeder, director of admissions and student financial assistance.

LOANS OFFERED BY THE OFFICE OF STUDENT FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

— Federal Direct Student Loans: Subsidized and unsubsidized loans for undergraduate and graduate students.
— Federal Direct Parent PLUS Loan: Unsubsidized loan for the parents of undergraduate students.
— Federal Direct Graduate PLUS Loan: Unsubsidized loan for graduate students.
— Federal Perkins Loan: Loan for undergraduate and graduate students with exceptional financial need.
— Alumni, Foundation and Emergency loans: Institutional loans for enrolled students.
— Alternative Loans: Unsubsidized loans for undergraduate and graduate students.

— Office of Student Financial Assistance Web site

Moeder said because of the hardships that private-sector lenders are facing, the university will only offer Federal Direct Loans.

"We are moving loans from the private sector back to the Federal Direct Student Loan program," he said. "These loans are processed and serviced directly by the federal government."

Moeder said K-State is taking this action to make

MAY DAY FACTS

1. May Day is Beltane, which means "day of fire." It is an ancient Pagan festival. Bel was the Celtic god of the sun.

2. May Day marks the seasonal transition from winter to summer and celebrated the first spring planting.

3. Putting a Maypole up involved taking a growing tree from the wood and bringing it to the village to mark the coming of summer. Single men and women would dance around the Maypole holding on to ribbons until they became entwined with their (hoped for) new loves.

4. Social hierarchy was set aside on May Day to involve everyone from the highest to the lowest economic status.

5. May Day is a celebration of fertility. In the old days, whole villages would go to the woods and all sorts of temporary sexual liaisons would take place.

6. Robin Goodfellow, also known as the Green Man was the Lord of Misrule on May Day. He and his supporters would make jokes and poke fun at the local authorities.

7. Parliament banned May Day festivities in 1644.

8. Unlike Easter, Whitsun or Christmas, May Day is the one festival of the year with no significant church service.

9. In previous centuries, working people would take the day off to celebrate, often without the support of their employer.

10. William Davidson, a black trade unionist and a revolutionary, was executed on May Day in 1820. Davidson was born in the then-pirate capital, Kingston, Jamaica and put a skull and crossbones on a black flag to say: "Let us die like men and not be sold like slaves." He was executed for being part of a conspiracy to kill the entire cabinet, and was hoped to give the spark to a revolution in Britain.

11. May Day is recognized throughout the world as International Workers' Day, or Labor Day. In 1884 U.S. and Canadian trade unions declared that after May 1st, 1886, eight hours would constitute a legal work day.

12. The United States and Canada do not recognize May Day. The U.S. government attempted to erase its history by declaring that May 1 was "Law Day" instead. They pronounced that Labor Day was to be on the first Monday of September, a date of no significance.

Fake IDs easily spotted by bouncers

Aubree Casper
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Potential fake ID holders might want to think twice about spending the $10-$200 that the Kansas Department of Transportation estimates a false ID costs.

According to the KDOT Web site, getting caught using a fake ID with your real name and picture on it but a false birth date can carry consequences of a $1,000 fine, six months in jail and 100 hours of court-ordered community service.

Ben Hansen, freshman in business administration, has been using his brother's expired ID since graduating from high school last spring.

"I have used it every weekend that I have been in [Manhattan]," Hansen said. "I used it at my favorite liquor store and to get into bars."

While he said he experienced scrutiny from local liquor store employees, Hansen used his charm and was able to "play it off pretty well" by claiming he was "cursed with a young face."

The illegitimacy of Hansen's ID was called-out when he tried to use it in Lawrence at a Cork and Barrel liquor store. After two employees determined that the person on the ID was Hansen's brother, the clerks told him they were keeping the ID and were going to call the police if he did not leave.

After the incident in Lawrence, Hansen said he does not think he will be getting a new fake anytime soon. He said he would not ever consider getting one made with his photo and a false birthday because they do not usually look legitimate, but he said he might think about using another person's real ID who looks like him. Hansen said all of his friends from his hometown have fakes.

Matt Cox, manager at Kite's Bar and Grill, said though the average number of fakes "pulled" varies, at least a few brave souls get caught with fake IDs at the bar each week.

He said Kite's has no way to catch them all, and no formal numbers have been produced on how many students have fake IDs in Manhattan or in the U.S.

Cox said Kite's and other area businesses have extensive training from the RCPD Aggieville Seminar, in which local law enforcement officials teach bartenders and doormen what to look for when examining IDs to see if they are legitimate.

Though Cox said most people with fake IDs use the old identification of a friend or sibling who is of legal age, a popular trend among fake IDs is to have one made from out-of-state driver's licenses.

Many students believe a bouncer is less likely to be suspicious of an ID from another state, but Cox said Budweiser provides bars and restaurants with manuals picturing the current and recent versions of licenses from all 50 states and the different security features of each.

Cox also said bouncers and bartenders examine the card cut, flexibility and picture.

Similar to most bars in Aggieville, Kite's employees are told to take the ID from the person and say something like, "I don't think this is really you. I can call the cops to verify this information or you can just leave."

He said most minors just leave, but should they refuse to do so or even get caught by the police, such actions are likely to be followed by a pair of handcuffs and a trip into the RCPD substation on Moro Street in Aggieville. As for the confiscated IDs, most bouncers either turn them over to police for evidence, hold on to them personally or collect them and give them to the RCPD so the officers can use them for training purposes.

I think hot girls in junky cars are sexy.

Seriously, put the Uggs away, all right? And don't even get me started on the cutoff sweatpants. Jeez.

To the girl running on Denison on Tuesday: Yeah, you're supposed to run on the sidewalk, not in the street.

To the two people making out in front of Bluemont: Hopefully you're not planning on being teachers, because we don't allow PDA.

Hey, Collegian: Thanks for making Monday's cryptoquip unsolvable. You ruined my geology class for me.

To the guy who liked the dancing Bluemont girls: Two of us are single.

Hey, they took down the poles over by Dykstra. Which one won the lighting contest?

Dear roommate: Did it seriously take you three weeks to throw away your pizza box and put away the ice cream scooper?

I so want to apologize to the girl who walked in front of my pickup today and I about hit your dog. I totally didn't see your little white dog, whatever it was. I'm sorry.

This is ResNet. We have deleted your servers. Thank you for your help with this, and have a great day.

This is ResNet. Stop calling us.

This is for real. Today at 11:30 a.m. I will be giving away a free $1 coin, and it's going to be at the Bosco Plaza.

Michael Beasley: You're on my heart just like a tattoo.

I just met a bunch of 40-year-old Sigma Chi's, and they were huge too. Coincidence? I think not.

I saw a guy at Wal-Mart wearing a pair of Classy Cat sweatpants. Nice pants, trashy cat.

I wish I was cool enough to work out at the Rec and wear a hat at the same time, but I'm not so I don't.

Please sign the petition for a Manhattan dog park at petitiononline.com/mhkdogpk. Thanks.

So, I'm drinking at Tubby's, and my friend tries to tell me it's a rule that I can't have my hat on crooked. So I looked at him and laughed.

Does anybody else find it weird that this old guy is sitting more gangster in the passenger's seat than I ever have?

More like, because it is my birthday, I am willing to lower my standards.

Don't monkey. Seriously.

More roaches at Kramer.

If I ever get rich, I hope I'm not mean to poor people like I am now.

I found a skull in the woods. I got really curious about it. I wondered who this person was, and why they had deer horns.

Hey, guys in 8:30 chemistry: Is it really that hard to take a shower and wash your clothes?

The only thing more annoying than a phone going off in class is when the idiot whose phone rings actually answers it.

This is ResNet. We don't manage the Internet connection.

If you wear a Texas Longhorns shirt and you're standing in the middle of the crosswalk, you will get hit. I'm sorry.

A message to the uninformed: ResNet does not manage the network. We do not have control over network upgrades. We don't do that. All we do is help people regain access to the network and fix your computers. That is all.

Cheating in atletics common, but unacceptable for fans, game

With the Olympics fast approaching and Major League Baseball season well underway, it seems only a matter of time before stories of cheating athletes begin to flood the media once again.

It's the same story almost every time; a standout athlete is lauded by the public, made rich by the establishment and eventually brought down by a positive drug test. It happens year after year and Olympics after Olympics. And it happens across the board – almost every nation and every sport has been touched by cheating in the last decade.

It is disappointing to the fans when they discover their favorite sports heroes have cheated their way to the top. Who wasn't disappointed in Barry Bonds, Marion Jones or Floyd Landis when we discovered that their seemingly superhuman feats were the results of steroid use? Along with that disappointment, comes the question "why?" Why do athletes cheat?

In most cases, the answer isn't as simple as you would think. For the most part, athletes who cheat are not doing it for fame or money. According to an article in Slate Magazine, some cheat to win, but most do it simply to survive in their sport. Bonds might be a superstar, but if nearly half of all baseball players are using steroids, as some studies, congressional testimony and autobiographies suggest, then most of them are doing it just to pay the bills, not to break records.

JESSICA HENSLEY

For professional athletes, doping has become something of a rite of passage, marking the point where a lifelong passion becomes a way to survive.

"The moment you dope you become 10 times more professional," said British cyclist David Millar in an interview following his own positive drug test. "You say, 'This is no longer a sport – this is my job.'"

This year, as we look forward to the Olympics in Beijing, an event already plagued with problems, we must wonder how many athletes will resort to cheating to win. Already, there are reports of new drugs athletes are using. A New Scientist article reported that the drug bupropion can be used to aid athletes in endurance events by increasing the body temperature that their brains can withstand before exhaustion sets in. Bupropion and many other new drugs – if history is any indicator – most likely will make an appearance at this year's Olympic Games.

In an environment where the playing field hasn't been level since the invention of performance-enhancing drugs, athletes are almost forced by circumstance into cheating, but that doesn't make it right. We expect more of our athletes, or at least we should. Record-breaking performances might be fun to watch, but all too often they are the result of cheating.

We as a society must change our attitude toward cheating in elite-level athletics to preserve the health of the athletes and the purity of sport. We should expect clean performances over spectacular ones, and we should reward those who set a good example for our children. Today, athletes are the heroes of our society, and we should expect more of them than false performances aided by chemistry.

Fort Riley newcomers must learn basics of treating women with respect, dignity

It takes a lot to serve in the armed forces. It takes courage, strength and endurance. To experience the ongoing battles over in the Middle East firsthand and then come back and be expected to live a normal life is something I could never do. Life in the military is a hard one, but the United States could not be the superpower it is in the world without it. I have immense respect for those serving in the military, but a lot of them don't respect me.

KELSEY CHILDRESS

According to a Collegian article published Tuesday, "during the past few weeks, 3,500 Fort Riley troops have returned from Iraq ... over the next two years, more than 3,000 additional troops will be added." This will and definitely already has changed the dynamics of Manhattan as a whole, but it has especially changed Aggieville.

My friends and I go to Aggieville three or four times a month. We usually have a great time, reveling with other bar-hoppers until the wee hours of the morning. However, there has been a slight change in the atmosphere of Aggieville in the past few months. What used to be mainly college students is now including a larger number of soldiers from Fort Riley. While the theme of Aggieville is usually "the more the merrier," sometimes with soldiers, it is not the case.

With more soldiers also comes more disrespect to me as a woman. I have received more catcalls, more inappropriate comments, more unwelcome touching than I have ever had before. And I have to say, about 85 percent of these were from soldiers. It is hard to respect men who do not respect me and my personal boundaries, especially when these actions were unprovoked or even happen after I say I have a boyfriend. Where are the practitioners of the "man law" – thou shalt not hit on another man's girlfriend?

Soldiers never know where they are going to be in the next year or even six months and I can understand how that would lead to a mindset of attempting to have the best time possible. However, for many women, the best time possible does not include a stranger slapping their bottom as they walk by or a man emerging from behind to whisper in their ear, "Your boyfriend shouldn't leave you alone when you look like that."

While I am trying my hardest not to jump to conclusions, it is hard not to when most of my own negative experiences with men in Aggieville were with soldiers. Obviously there are many soldiers out there who love and respect women, but there are also many who obviously don't.

Soldiers (and men in general) need to be polite to women in Manhattan. This problem doesn't go down to soldiers vs. college students, but rather a call for manners in a time when there doesn't seem to be any. We go to Aggieville to have a good time with our friends, like you, and I refuse to have my night disrupted again by another man who thinks that licking his lips in my direction qualifies as a good opening line.

TO THE POINT

Students must help to preserve

Along with the price of gas and meat, the prices of fresh produce have been steadily increasing. Just recently, though, they seem to have shot through the roof. Organic gardening is perhaps a way we can all give back to the planet we take so much from.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Though organic gardening is not necessarily the cheapest way to combat this issue, it can save you money if you search for the cheapest seeds and use your local resources. For example, K-State's cattle provide free compost material, and UFM rents out small plots of land for gardening for a reasonable price.

Also, organic gardening not only helps the environment, it's part of the one of the most natural and healthy diets there is, producing fresh fruits and vegetables in both the spring and fall seasons.

While students typically don't have all the necessary resources available to start their own organic garden, opportunities are available to get involved with K-State's horticulture department and the UFM. Even helping out elderly neighbors with their plot can provide the satisfaction one gets from helping the planet sustain its natural resources.

We are using up our resources faster than ever, it seems, but even small steps can help steer us in the right direction to preserve our planet.

KPA, Pratt Tribune assist Greensburg's newspaper in time of need

Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nearly one year ago, the small town of Greensburg, Kan., was devastated by an F5 tornado, which left the entire city, including the site for its weekly newspaper, the Kiowa County Signal, flattened.

However, with the support of the Kansas Press Association and local and national newspapers, the Signal has never missed an issue.

Within hours of the storm, members of the Pratt Tribune, a neighboring newspaper that operates out of Pratt, Kan., traveled 30 miles south to Greensburg and began to formulate a plan with KPA and the Signal to produce the town's paper in the Tribune newsroom, said Keith Lippoldt, publisher for the Tribune.

"The tornado hit at 9:45 [p.m.] on Friday, and by 6 the next morning, KPA had already contacted my boss and contacted me, asked 'What can we do to help?' and offered [reporters] equipment and whatever they needed," Lippoldt said. "It was amazing what they did for us."

Doug Anstaett, executive director of KPA, said the association was there to offer help and assistance to the Signal as much as it could.

"There were going to be so many stories to cover," he said. "It's a very small paper, and we knew they needed some assistance."

Anstaett said KPA contributed a photographer and a few reporters, including himself, to the Signal and drove down to Pratt to help with the paper's coverage.

"We met with the newspaper staff and talked to them about what kind of needs they might have," he said. "Obviously there were just dozens of stories to tell, so we just wanted to supplement coverage and help them tell some of the stories they couldn't get to in that first day or two."

Anstaett said in the first few days after the tornado, the regular Signal newspaper staff was busy writing stories about what and how much was damaged, where residents could go for help and about President Bush's planned visit to give condolences. It was the Tribune and KPA reporters who wrote the personal stories.

Gary Mehl, former KPA president, said the paper's content was strictly about the town and what its people were going through because, "at that point, there was nobody interested in anything else."

He said the Tribune "really picked up the ball" to help gather stories and get the weekly Monday edition of the Signal, which displayed a front page with only the trailing words "Blown Away," ready for distribution. But instead of delivering the papers by car or carrier, each edition of the May 7, 2007, paper was distributed by hand. Mehl, along with Lippoldt and a few other KPA and Tribune members, trekked through the Greensburg rubble and debris and personally handed out the Signal to locals who were desperately digging through ruins.

Mehl recalled stopping to give a paper to a local man rummaging through a pile of debris and asking him how he was doing.

"I'm doing the best I can," he responded.

Mehl said the man was trying to salvage anything he could from his flattened home, which now lays two blocks north of where it stood just three days earlier.

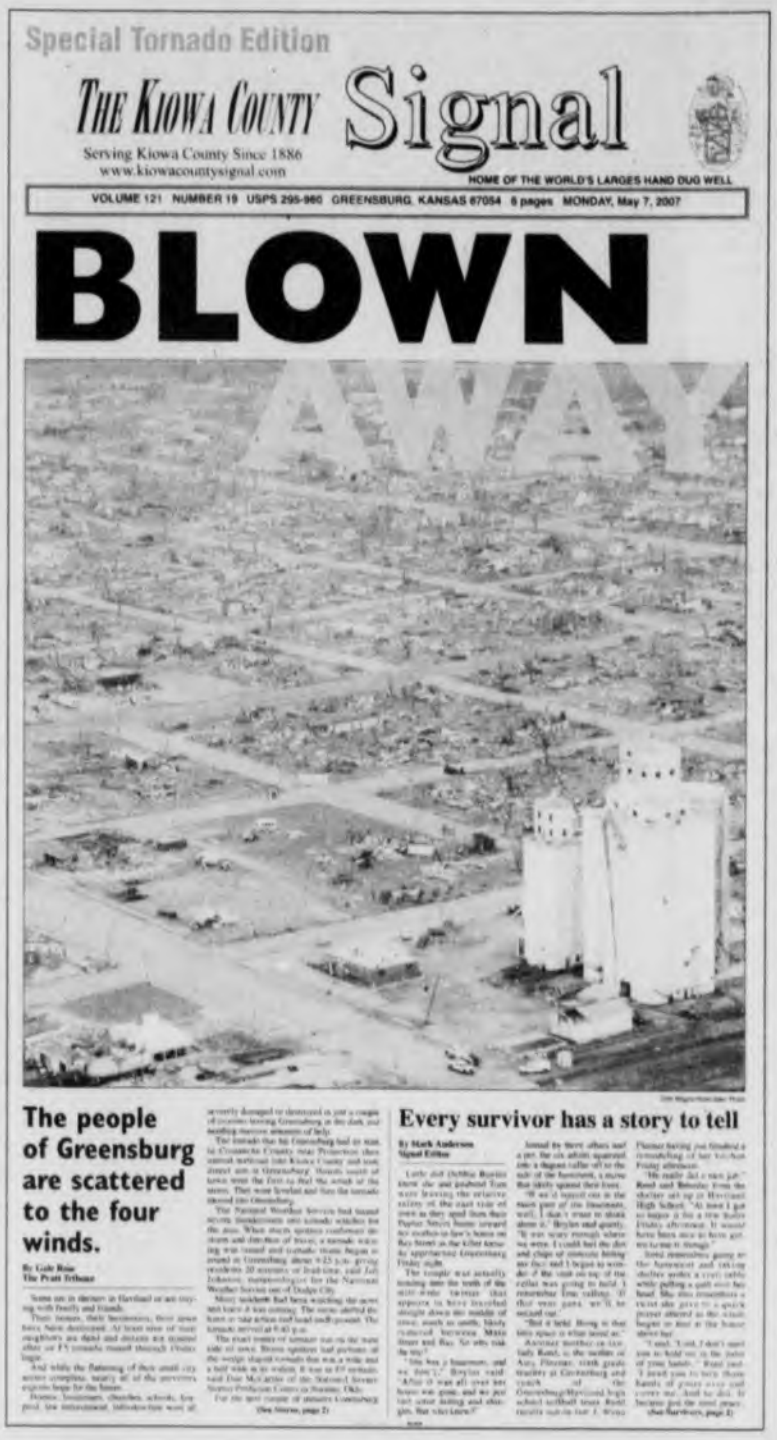
"The wind had literally picked it up and blown it away," Mehl said.

Though Mehl said he passed many who were experiencing an array of emotions that day, he said there was one emotion that prevailed.

"The Greensburg paper is ittybitty," he said. "It's an eight-page paper, but that one paper giving them news about their hometown and what happened there – they were extremely grateful to the point where tears came to their eyes, because this was the only source of identity they had left.

"I'll never forget how much it meant to them. I get choked up just talking about it. It just struck me how valuable a local newspaper is to those people, and we take that for granted all the time, and that just shouldn't be the case."

In addition to providing equipment and reporting assistance to the Signal and the Tribune, Anstaett said KPA also contacted newspapers associated with the organization as well as papers in cities that had been through similar disaster situations to whom, in the time of need, the association had donated money.



He said KPA asked papers in Louisiana and Mississippi that had been devastated by Hurricane Katrina and a few papers in North Dakota that suffered severe flooding several years ago to reciprocate a donation.

Anstaett said KPA raised a total of $4,500 within the first week of the disaster, which they used to purchase advertisements for the Signal.

"In a situation like that where you lose your town, you lose all your advertisers – you lose all your revenue," he said. "We placed [ads] in their newspaper paid for by newspapers in states with associations to give them a little revenue to get back on their feet."

Lippoldt said the Signal has continued to operate out of Pratt since then, but should have a temporary office in Greensburg in the next few weeks. And even though almost a year has passed since the tragedy, he said KPA still asks the papers if it can offer any help or assistance.

"That's the reason you join organizations like that," Lippoldt said. "Especially this one because they really do want to help, and that was just great being able to be a part of that deal."

Disc golf club team aims to grow team, spread sport

By Jose Garcia
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As winter winds down, most spring sports head into the postseason, the sun starts to shine a bit more, and one team is just getting started: the disc golf club team.

The K-State team this year consists of about 10 active members, but next year there will be a possibility of about 20 players set for competition.

Though it has grown in popularity since early 2005, the sport was actually invented in 1976 by Ed Hedrick, the inventor of the modern day Frisbee.

With the long winter and colder evenings, this season had a sort of damper on it. Now that the weather is getting much warmer and it has been brighter outside, the team can practice to improve its skills for next season.

"The nice weather creates a great atmosphere to relax and have a good time – that is what disc golf is all about." said Patrick Cassity, sophomore in civil engineering.

Team members said disc golf is not like most other club sports; it is more of a relaxing and fun way to get outside.

Though there are a few competitive leagues in the Midwest, the K-State club team is more focused on interacting and making students aware of the sport and team.

"Right now we are focused on rebuilding, we have a lot of work to do but there are several things we need to do to promote the team." said Joey Collins, senior in mechanical engineering.

Even if the team is rebuilding and not looking to be competitive this year, the future appears bright as the team looks forward to competing and being active around Kansas next year.

"We look forward to traveling next season and being way more competitive with other college club teams." said Collins.

Collins said the team will post flyers around campus this summer for interested players and will begin monthly meetings sometime in May.

There is a disc golf course on campus. The course incorporates light poles and natural elements but does not use baskets for holes.

There is also a course with baskets at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

NFL DRAFT

Other Cats look to make it in NFL

MIKE DEVADER

K-State fans put all their focus on Jordy Nelson when looking at the 2008 NFL draft, and rightly so.

But there are a couple more players from the 2007 Wildcat squad to watch when NFL mini-camps and training camps start up this fall.

Defensive end Rob Jackson was drafted by the Washington Redskins in the seventh round at pick 242. Jackson could be a good fit with the Redskins with his good pass-rushing ability and relentless motor.

I talked to him a couple weeks ago, and Jackson said he was going to visit the Oakland Raiders, but being a Chiefs fan, I'm very glad he didn't go to Raider Nation.

Though seventh-round picks are usually a long shot to make their respective squads, Jackson's work ethic and the fact K-State players are well liked in the NFL might give him a leg up on some of the undrafted players.

Now, instead of wishing harm on him, we can watch him hopefully create havoc on the league.

Those two guys were the only K-State players to hear their names called on one of the biggest weekends in professional football, but in the NFL, teams' seasons hang on the balance of scouting. Immediately following the draft, teams go crazy trying to find the best of the rest in college football.

With that being said, two more Wildcat players were signed after the draft, with the possibility of a couple more signing in the near future. Cornerback Justin McKinney and linebacker Justin Roland signed rookie free agent contracts with the St. Louis Rams and Philadelphia Eagles, respectively.

When looking at the situation McKinney is in with the Rams, it's going to be really hard for him to make the roster unless he does something amazing. As of Tuesday, St. Louis lists nine cornerbacks on their roster, including 2005 first-round draft pick, Tye Hill. The Rams also drafted a corner in the fourth round on Sunday, taking Penn State product Justin King.

The newest Eagle from K-State is Roland. He steps into a promising situation where he could work his way on the field through his efforts on special teams. Takeo Spikes is gone from the roster and the linebacker corps is young, so if Roland can prove himself on special teams, he could sneak his way on defense just like former Wildcat Zac Diles did last year with the Houston Texans.

Every year teams look for the so-called diamonds in the rough. If these former Wildcats can play with a chip on their shoulders, they will make their respective teams look very smart.

Sproles joins other sports legends who stutter

Playing professional football is easier than speaking. Just ask Darren Sproles, the San Diego Chargers football player who made history last season by returning a kickoff and a punt for his first two NFL touchdowns in the same game.

SPROLES

The running back, who became aware of his struggle with stuttering at age four, said the problem became more pronounced when he was a star player at K-State.

"I had to talk to the media a lot, and once they put a camera in my face, that's when it got bad," Sproles said. "I just had to work on it. I couldn't really stress about it, because that's just me."

Playing the game has always come easy for Sproles. The spoken word is more difficult.

"I remember a long time ago my grandpa told me, 'Don't ever let anybody tell you that you can't do anything because you stutter." Sproles said. "I always remembered that and worked hard at improving my speech."

Sproles joins other sports legends who stutter, like Bill Walton, Kenyon Martin, Ken Venturi and Bob Love.

"Darren Sproles will be a great source of inspiration to young people who struggle with stuttering," said Jane Fraser, president of the Stuttering Foundation.

The 24-year-old Sproles is always taking steps to control his stuttering and to help others. He bypassed potential NFL riches following his junior season and returned to K-State to complete his degree in speech pathology. Darren got advice from basketball great, Bill Walton, who struggled with stuttering and is now a successful broadcaster.

Sproles said he learned an important lesson – to take his time while answering questions during an interview.

"I don't have to be in a hurry to say something," he said.

Coming out of K-State, Sproles was one of the most prolific runners and all-purpose performers in college football history. He set nearly every school record imaginable – 23 in all – and is regarded by many as the best player in the 110-year history of K-State football.

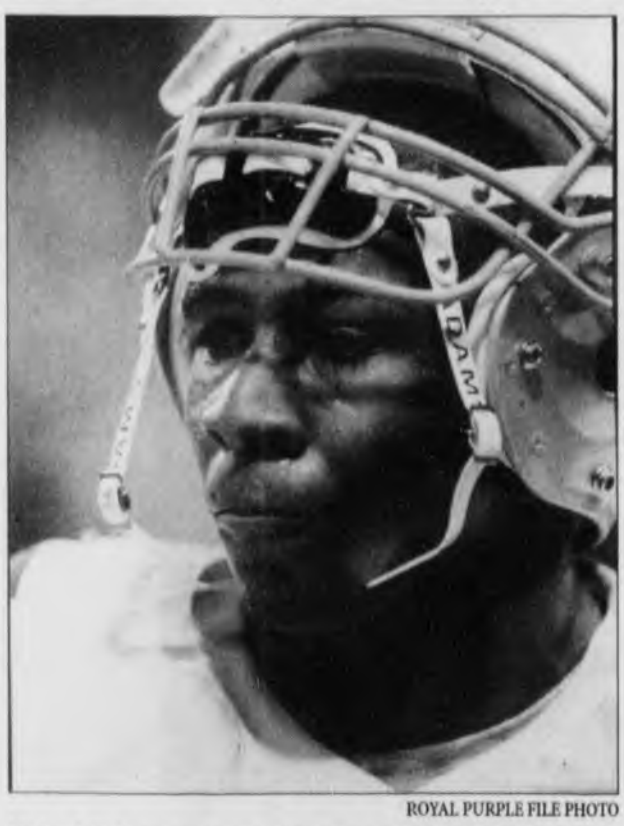
WHERE ARE THEY NOW?



Former Wildcats succeed at different professional levels in respective sports

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the school year draws to a close and several of K-State's most loved student-athletes prepare to leave Manhattan, some might wonder what has happened to those who have done the same in the last 10 years.

Some will remember Michael Bishop, the quarterback of the football team the year K-State was ranked No. 1, or Jonathan Beasley, another notable quarterback from the Bill Snyder glory years. Many might remember Jeremiah Massey (and his curly hair) from the not-so-good years of the basketball team and Nicole Ohlde, who helped lead the women's basketball team to prominence on the national level. Each one of these players has seen different career successes during their time outside of K-State, whether it be playing professionally in America or overseas, or even branching into coaching. Here's a look into the lives of four Wildcats who have moved on past Manhattan.

K-State dancers showcase self-choreographed pieces

Holly Hickerson, senior in theater, plays the role in the dance Telelestai, choreographed by Cali Dunham, senior in kinesiology. The dance was part of the Dance Student Spotlight that took place Wednesday night at Forum Hall.

Famous pop, hip-hop and latino rhythms filled the K-State Student Union Forum Hall on Wednesday evening.

More than 30 students performed dances in a variety of styles during Dance Student Spotlight, an informal concert exclusively featuring K-State student choreography.

Julie Pentz, assistant professor of dance, thanked an audience filled with friends and family of the dancers for coming and showing their support of the K-State students.

Katie Lero and Mindy Von Elling opened the concert with an energetic and spirited dance to the R&B music of Robin Thicke's, "Everything I Can't Have."

A large group of students performed a dance called Gakkoyokyozai to traditional Japanese music. Though it was organized by KSU Japanese Yosakoi Dance Club, many people from different backgrounds wore different colorful national costumes.

"It is important to have people from all kinds of cultures performing," said Michelle Mazur, graduate student in animal science, who participated in the dance.

Jen Mayekawa, senior in modern languages, was dressed in a tight red-and-black outfit and performed a composition to traditional Flamenco music. She said her study abroad in Spain last semester inspired her to take dance classes.

Some people, like Sara Fultz, freshman in communication sciences and disorders, prepared for a month before the show. Others, like Shamekia Kiriklin, sophomore in open option and member of the K-State Classy Cats, had little time to practice - only one night.

"I'm used to dancing and was not nervous," Kiriklin said.

Some dancers performed several times and in different roles. Jennifer Grantman, senior in mass communications, first showed slow and delicate moves, then she became an elegant and charming woman from of the 30s, drawing a burst of applause from the audience.

All K-State student choreographers and dance clubs, professionals, and amateurs were invited to participate. The aim of the event was to present works in progress, experimental works, class projects and dance pieces that would otherwise not get shown in faculty concerts.

"I liked the show a lot, it was fun and exiting," said Aimee Anderson, junior in family studies human services.

Director offers post-interview tips

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At this point in the semester, many students are either waiting for an interview with a potential employer or eagerly awaiting an employer's response. With this in mind, Dottie Evans, assistant director of K-State Career and Employment Services, offers several tips for graduating seniors.

What are some dos and don'ts post-interview?

"One of the most important things to do is to thank the employer for their time they gave within their schedule to talk to a student candidate. That means some form of thank you.

Some guidelines for a thank-you are: a nice and personal handwritten letter. If the employer has mostly corresponded by e-mail, students can e-mail them a thank-you. Reinforce a particular highlight during the interview or skill you have and also let them know of the continued interest you have in the position."

What do students do if they go to an interview, but after the interview find they have no interest in the job?

"Do a thank-you letter for their time they took to talk to you, and state at the end that you want to go in a different direction."

How long should students wait to write a thank-you letter?

"Respond in the first 48 to 72 [hours] – the sooner the better."

What are things a student can do to stand out after an interview?

"First, a handwritten thank-you note including how your skills and experience match the position that is available.

Knowing what the employer's timeline of when their decision will be made and abiding by that timeline can help you stand out.

Being assertive enough to call in a polite way and tell them you are still interested.

Also, if the employer calls you back or you call them, ask if there is any more information that will help them in their decision. You will be helping them keep you in their mindset."

What are some actions employers might feel are pushy?

"This is a concern most students have, and it goes back to the final step of the interview when the employer may ask what are the candidates final questions, and that question may be, what is the timeline for making their decision. But this is not a pushy question, because it allows for the candidate to know when they should call if they have not received a phone call.

The candidate should ask them for the timeline of the decision and should abide by that. After the time has gone by, then you can call them and tell them you have continued interest in the position, and you can further discuss other questions you may have.

If they do not call back, just step back. Let it be in their court because they may be right in the middle of making the final decision, and that is when it may be pushy. Only do one follow-up."

If students get a callback for a follow-up interview, what should they do?

"In terms of containing

Communication professor lends experience to documentary class

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Working in an office in Dole Hall, Ron Frank, professor in the Department of Communications, edits one of eight 60-second Spanish novelas that he's creating in conjunction with the Family Nutrition Program for the Spanish-speaking population in the Garden City, Kan., area.

By Joseph Chapes
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In spring 2007 at K-State, the last thing Ron Frank wanted to do was teach.

Frank, a professor in the Department of Communications in the College of Agriculture, was the television-unit coordinator for the department's research and extension program. Even though he had produced hundreds of video and televisi n programs, he did not teach.

A NEWFOUND PASSION

Despite this, Frank agreed to teach a documentary-production class for his department and the school of journalism and mass communications. With his limited teaching experience, he was nervous when he went to that first class. This would soon change.

"After the first night, I was hooked," Frank said. "It was probably one of the most exciting things I've ever done. I came away with such an euphoric high, it was just unbelievable."

Frank enjoyed teaching the first class so much, he decided to teach it again in spring 2008. Though he had not taught much before, the students appreciate the more than 35 years of production history he brings to the classroom.

"His knowledge and experience with documentaries is varied and expansive," said Kyla Scates, senior in electronic media and a student from the first documentary class. "He's learned a lot in his years in the field, and it was very valuable to learn from his achievements and his mistakes."

LEARNING FROM EXPERIENCE

With his warm smile and thick glasses, Frank, 60, described how he gained this knowledge through his many years on the job.

He began his career in production at K-State when he was hired to oversee the new television facility for the College of Veterinary Medicine in the early 1970s. This facility was created when the college wanted to incorporate educational television into its classrooms.

This first television experience was enlightening for Frank, who had limited production knowledge.

His inexperience did not last long.

Frank was soon handling production jobs all over K-State since his facility was the only one on campus with the suitable equipment.

"It was a lot of fun," he said. "I learned a lot and was given wide latitude to do a lot of things, which I think benefited the university and myself concurrently."

Inspired by his own learning experience, Frank designed the documentary class so the students would learn through their own decisions. The class requires the students to work together and conceive, shoot and edit their own documentary.

"It's not all about how well you do on this test or are you going to be able to memorize this test," said Chris Lollar, senior in electronic media and one of the students in the current class. "It's more like, can you apply this in your video that you make or can you apply this in the work you do."

Frank said he continued to apply what he learned on the job while working with the Athletic Department when producing its coaches' shows and with the University News Service in the late 1970s.

In 1985, Frank was offered a job with cooperative extension in the College of Agriculture's Department of Communications. Despite his fears of producing "pig videos" for the rest of his career, he accepted.

Frank's new job would allow him to produce videos, documentaries, satellite programs, and now webcasts and podcasts. It has also enabled him to travel around the U.S., to experiment and adopt new production technology and to become a professor at K-State.

"It's the best job in the world," he said.

A PATH TO SUCCESS

At one time, being able to have such a job was something Frank would never have considered. While majoring in speech and radio-TV at Fort Hays State University, he began his media career while working as a radio disc jockey at a Fort Hays station.

Frank's college career ended when he began a family and left school with 10 hours left to graduate. He accepted a job at a radio station in Phillipsburg, Kan., as the news and program director and chief engineer.

"In those days, I'd never thought I would have a need for a college degree," Frank said. "With a young family and being a disc jockey, I thought, yeah, I can make it that way."

During this time, Frank joined the National Guard and served in a public affairs unit. After deciding he wanted to become an officer, he began to attend Officer Candidate School.

Frank eventually said he felt his family needed more money, though he worked 60 to 70 hours a week already. Soon his life would take a new course. One day, he saw a flyer that came with a reel of tape from the K-State Radio Network that advertised a job at the radio station at K-State.

"They were looking for an engineer, and I go, hey, why not?" Frank said.

He moved to Manhattan with his family in early 1972 and started his new career. When he finished Officer Candidate School, he received 11 hours that could be transferred to any Kansas college, essentially finishing his college degree. Frank then decided to pursue a master's degree in mass communications at K-State.

After a year and a half working as a radio engineer, Frank was hired to oversee the television facility for veterinary medicine. Frank completed his master's program by the time the job with cooperative extension opened up, which required the advanced degree.

"I've been pretty fortunate from one point, maybe never getting my college degree because of being out in western Kansas, to now being a full professor," Frank said.

Though Frank plans to continue working on video projects and documentaries, he has now realized that he wants to use his position as professor to pursue more teaching opportunities and to pass on the lessons he learned through his career to students.

"The most important thing I want to do to the students is to ignite a fire and [help them] say, 'I can do that, I want to do that,'" he said. "That's one of the best things we can do."

Organic gardening can contribute to sustainability of natural resources

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Green seems to be everyone's favorite color lately. From energy-saving insulation to reuseable shopping bags, the world is now possibly more "Earth-friendly" than ever.

But however new-fangled some of these energy-conservation methods seem, there are still a few that have been around since the beginning of humanity. For example, our ancestors practiced gardening to feed their families and animals, which led to the sustainment of the natural resources we have today.

According to www.gardensimply.com, sustainability is "meeting the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs."

Barbara Meyer and her husband Carl own and manage Horticultural Services off East Highway 24. Meyer said sustainability is a way of preserving Earth's natural resources. However, Meyer said the U.S. should not be too concerned.

"Our farmers are very conscientious of sustainability because they have to be, otherwise, their crops won't be any good," she said. "They are already taking care of it by replenishing the soil with crop rotation and other methods."

Horticulture Services has been doing their part in conserving our planet's natural resources, Meyer said. For example, in the garden center, water used to irrigate the plants is recaptured and funneled into two large tanks and recycled, and they also gather rain water to help nourish plants.

"It's not economically feasible to use up our resources and then throw them away," Meyer said.

She said Horticulture Services has also noticed more customer interest in organic gardening over the last five years.

Organic gardening consists of growing plants without chemical fertilizers and naturally building the soil to support healthy plant life, according to the Garden Simply site.

Brandon Gonzalez, junior in landscape design, said he recently started his own 50-foot-by-25-foot organic garden in his one-acre backyard in Manhattan. Gonzalez, who has worked at Horticulture Services for about two years, said he has always been into gardening but became more interested in sustainability and organic gardening after he took a soils class last year.

Gonzalez said the first step he took in starting his own organic garden was to get a soil sample from his backyard tested at the soil lab in Throckmorton Hall.

His soil came back with low nitrogen levels, normal phosphorous levels and extremely high levels of potassium. He said these are the three main elements that help determine if soil has the right kinds of plant nutrients for a healthy garden.

Gonzalez also said Kansas soil typically has above-average levels of phosphorous, so his soil checked out and he decided to go ahead with his garden plans.

Next, Gonzalez hand-tilled his plot with a shovel to break up the ground's hard surface and bring fresh soil to the top. However, he suggested gardeners with larger plots rent a roto-tiller to do this job.

"I wouldn't recommended doing it by hand," he said with a laugh. "I mean, I definitely enjoyed doing it that way, but it was a lot of work. It would probably work better for just smaller areas."

Gonzalez is now getting ready to plant his garden with a variety of fruits and vegetables. He said certain plants can be grown in both spring and fall crops. For example, potatoes, radishes, broccoli and lettuce can be harvested in both seasons, while watermelon, cantaloupe and tomatoes are more products of spring gardening.

However, most students do not have a large area, if any, to plant a garden. Gonzalez suggested looking into either helping a friend with their garden or renting cheap, public land on which to plant.

Gonzalez also suggested planting on land without trees, which could block the sunlight, and using compost to replace soil nutrients used up by the plants.

"The goal of compost is to speed up the breakdown process of the nutrients you need to put into your soil," he said. "K-State offers free compost at the cattle research center off of Purcell Road."

He also said he likes to use compost because it's much more natural than even organic chemicals.

"I'm just not a big fan of chemicals," he said. "I do see some places where they fit in because organic gardening is not always the most practical way."

Stacy Smith, manager of People's Grocery on 17th Street, said organic gardening has many benefits for not only the environment, but also people's health.

"When you buy organic and put natural fuel in your body, you just feel better," she said. "Fresh produce doesn't contain the kinds of harmful hormones and antibiotics junk food does.

"Also, organic food doesn't come wrapped in near as much packaging, so that's another way you can help the environment."

COMPOST GUIDELINES

Almost any organic material is suitable for a compost pile. The pile needs a proper ratio of carbon-rich materials, or "browns," and nitrogen-rich materials, or "greens." The following are suggested additions for any compost pile:

—Pine needles; need to be chopped or shredded
—Grass clippings; lay out to dry prior to use for composting
—Kitchen refuse; like melon rinds, carrot peelings and tea bags
—Wood ashes; avoid coal ashes and charcoal briquettes
—Manure; the older, the better

ASK THE FIFTH YEAR

When co-workers discuss sex lives, shut them up with own awkward tales

Where the hell were you last week?

ADAM REICHENBERGER

Where was I? I was living the dream, babe – living the dream. That dream included, but was not limited to, watching both David Bowie's masterpiece, "The Labyrinth," and Stallone's Blockbuster smash, "Over the Top." This brings me to my second point; if you want a job, go get it. If there's one lesson I learned from "Over the Top," it's that "the world meets nobody halfway." If you want something you gotta go get it yourself. If you want a job, go get one. Send out your résumé to every possible place you can think of. A friend of mine just got a job as a manager of a coffee shop at an Alaskan national park. It doesn't make any sense to me either, but all he did was apply. You can't get a job if you don't try. And if you're still struggling pull a Lincoln Hawk, spin that hat around, and "turn it on." Go watch "Over the Top."

I was also real busy sneaking into a suite with a beautiful lady at the Spring Game. And thank God, because I couldn't have sat through that game sober. We enjoyed free beer and sandwiches in a suite to ourselves, dangling our legs out the window enjoying all the squirrels below as they scurried about for their acorns. I've given up on mine.

So as you can see, I had no time to write an article. Or I just forgot. I'll let you decide.

How do you get your co-workers to quit talking about their sex lives?

Talk about yours.
If it's anything like mine, it will be a long conversation full of dislocated shoulders, awkward hellos and even more awkward goodbyes, but trust me it's even more awkward for the people who have to hear about it.

If they have something good to say about their sex life, but you still can't stand to hear about it, then wait until you hear the name of their partner and immediately respond adversely. Give an, "Oh," and look down at the floor, or an, "eeee," followed by a short laugh. Then answer, "nothing," to all of their questions.

You could also be the annoying one-upper. No one likes the one-upper. They had good sex last night? You had better sex. They had bad sex? Yours was just the pits. Don't even let them finish their story. Immediately go into grave details of your night and show them the scars to prove it. These scars work both for good or bad nights; just tweak the story a bit.

Eventually they'll lose interest in talking to you all together, which in the case of some of my co-workers, wouldn't be so bad at all.

"MADE OF HONOR" PG-13

Tom Bailey is in love with his best friend Claire. But Tom has a fear of commitment and refuses to admit the obvious — he should propose to Claire before she finds a less procrastinating suitor. When Colin, a rich Scotsman, sweeps Claire off her feet and asks for her hand in marriage, Tom must witness her unquestioned happiness up close and personal — because she's chosen him to be her maid of honor.

"SON OF RAMBOW" PG-13

In 1980's Britain, young Will Proudfoot is raised in isolation among The Brethren, a puritanical religious sect in which music and TV are strictly forbidden. When Will encounters his first movie, a pirated copy of "Rambo: First Blood," his imagination is blown wide open. Now, Will sets out to join forces with the seemingly diabolical school bully, Lee Carter, to make their own action epic, devising wildly creative, on-the-fly stunts, not to mention equally elaborate schemes for creating a movie of total commitment and non-stop thrills while hiding out from The Brethren.

Economics professor reflects on Jamaican roots, studies in Colorado

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A 2006 Air Jamaica calendar sits on Philip Gayle's desk in Waters Hall. The small calendar with its sunny scenes serves as a reminder of Gayle's home.

Gayle, assistant professor of economics, was born in Jamaica and lived there until he moved to Colorado in 1998. He received his doctorate in economics from the University of Colorado at Boulder in 2002 and joined K-State's faculty in August 2002.

Gayle laughed when he was asked how he went from Jamaica to Colorado and said people often ask him that question. Though Colorado had a significant climate change, Gayle said he chose the University of Colorado at Boulder because the university offered him the most scholarships among the doctoral programs at which he applied.

"I'd never experienced winter before I went to Colorado," he said. "It was my first time seeing snow, and I really enjoyed it."

Gayle grew up in Jamaica, but he and his family had taken several summer vacations to the U.S. during his childhood to places like Miami, Georgia and New York.

Cable TV has allowed people in Jamaica access to popular U.S. sports like basketball and American football, though soccer is still the most popular sport in Jamaica, Gayle said. He admitted he did experience change in his move to the U.S., though it was not a dramatic change, he said.

Gayle's doctoral class at the University of Colorado at Boulder incorporated different cultures, he said. Students from Thailand, China and other nationalities were included, and Gayle said the experience helped him mature.

"I learned so much about other people and what is common among people with different ethnicities," he said. "We all got along very well. We shared so much in common and culturally."

Gayle, 33, is a permanent U.S. resident and is married and has one son, Kimani. During his leisure time, Gayle said he enjoys going to the park with his family and flying kites with Kimani. Gayle also is an avid soccer fan.

Though he is still young in his professional career, Gayle said he wants to continue an academic career with teaching and researching. He was granted tenure as an associate professor, which will take effect in fall 2008.

After he received his bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of the West Indies, Gayle worked one year as an economist for the Fair Trading Commission in Jamaica. The Fair Trading Commission is similar to the Federal Trade Commission in the U.S.; the Fair Trading Commission investigates competition issues and unfair trade practices between two firms.

This one-year work experience helped Gayle think critically about his doctoral studies, he said.

Philip Gayle, assistant professor of economics, sits at his desk in his office in Waters Hall. Gayle was hired at K-State as a professor after studying at the University of Colorado and and a university in Jamaica before that.

Matt Castro
COLLEGIAN

"Once I got to this institution [Fair Trading Commission] and started working, it was very clear that I wanted to specialize in industrial organization," Gayle said. "Sometimes it's actually helpful to work for one year after your undergraduate or master's," Gayle said. "Sometimes the work experience can really help you make up your mind if you're not sure."

Industrial organization is the study of markets and how the market structure might influence firms' behaviors, Gayle said. He also specializes in econometrics, which is the use of statistical methods to test economical theories, he said.

"A lot of the theories that would come out of industrial organization I would use econometrics to test – these two really go hand in hand," Gayle said.

LECTURE | Director emphasizes importance of international acceptance

He said the growth of Asian countries, especially China, has given them confidence in competing with the traditional western powers for trade and investment interests.

Though it is determined to build a strong military, Hayden said China is not an enemy to the U.S. For the relationship to remain strong, though, Hayden said China needs to accept the responsibility of being a world power.

"If Beijing begins to accept greater responsibility for the health of the international system – as all global powers should – we will remain on a conservative, even if competitive, path," he said. "If not, the rise of China begins to look more adversarial."

The last trend focused on maintaining the currently stable relationship with European countries. Hayden said now that the relationship is stronger, the U.S. has focused on other threats in other parts of the world – namely terrorism.

The relationship isn't all good though. While the U.S. has the idea to forge a global war on terrorism threats, most European countries have the policy to defend their own countries rather than fighting abroad.

"Managing the disagreements and tensions that arise in the absence of a unified vision will complicate what has traditionally been America's easiest relationship," he said.

To meet the challenges of a new international relations policy, Hayden said the CIA is working to recruit officers that are familiar with the ethnic and cultural issues of these new international focuses. He also said the CIA is looking for people that speak Middle East languages like Arabic, Urdu and Farsi and also Asian languages.

Though Hayden said the U.S. will continue to guide international policy based on its own values and ideas, he said the U.S. cannot be strictly set on these guidelines and open to change.

"Failure to see and understand the potential impact of underlying trends like the three I just spoke of would be more than what my analysts call a mirror-image problem," he said. "It would be a failure of imagination – one of the surest paths to an intelligence breakdown."

After the presentation and to Hayden's surprise, K-State President Jon Wefald called Hayden's lecture the best presentation from a CIA director about the state of the world in the past 50 years.

"I'm so glad that so many people could come to this lecture today becuase you just heard a powerful, clear analytical lecture on not just American world policy, but so many in and outs of this complex world that we're living in 2008," Wefald said.

Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture Series and associate to the president, said Hayden brought up several important issues that could lead to the destabilization of the world's balance of power if not addressed and also related these issues to students by saying that the CIA is looking for officers educated in liberal arts studies like anthropology and sociology.

"He wanted to make a major policy statement, and he did," Reagan said.

A varied audience of K-State students and faculty, community members, Landon Lecture Series patrons and serveral members of the military filled McCain Auditorium. The audience listened quietly to Hayden for much of his 40-minute lecture. But Hayden brought out laughter through much of the question-and-answer session after the lecture.

Several students, some who attended for class credit and others for purely educational purposes, said Hayden's lecture was important for understanding the future of international relations.

"I thought what he said about the rise of Asia [was an important issue] because its gonna be such an important issue, honestly, and also can they they handle all the responsibilities that comes with the power," said Rosanne George, senior in marketing.

LOANS | K-State hopes to ensure loans for all students in need sure students are guaranteed the necessary financial assistance. Since Federal Family Educational Loans, also know as Stafford Loans, are run by private lenders, and since some lenders have reduced the number of loans they offer, Moeder said the Federal Direct Loans will be the smartest choice for students.

He also said students can request to use Stafford Loans, but this would be rare.

"The university will still offer Stafford Loans if the student requests it," he said, "if they have a relationship with a lender and they want to keep it that way. This probably will be very, very rare. Maybe if they have been with a bank for a while."

GOVERNMENT DOLLARS

Federal Direct loans do not involve private lenders, since the government supplies to fund, and it is because of this that Direct loans are much less risky than other loans. Since these loans are guaranteed, some students don't see the financial crisis as a threat to financial assistance.

Janelle Franklin, senior in animal science and industry, said she does not follow business or economic news, and she was not worried about how the economy and credit situation will affect her financial aid.

"My mom pays attention to stuff like that, but not me," she said. "School is my main focus right now."

HARD TIMES

Franklin said she has had student loans all four years of college, and she receives them from Sallie Mae, the largest student lender in the country. Sallie Mae reported a first-quarter loss of more than $100 million, the company's Web site reported on April 16.

Moeder said it is difficulties like those faced by Sallie Mae that the university wants to ensure that students get the loans they need. He said the two types of loans offered are similar, in that the interest rates are the same and set by law, but that the security of Federal Direct loans offer more certainty.

"Federal Direct Loans are the best option for students because of the stability and benefits," he said.

The benefits these loans offer are the ability for students to consolidate their loans and students can choose to subsidize their loans, in which interest does not take effect until after the student leaves college, or unsubsidized loans in which the interest accrues, he said.

PAY BACK TO THE FUTURE

Franklin said she will continue to take out loans in the future, but that she's not sure from whom.

"I'm going to grad school, so I will have a lot to pay back," she said. "It will take a while, but I should be able to pay it back."

Moeder said the university's decision will not affect any students with outstanding Stafford Loans, and loans will always be available.

"Students have nothing to be worried about," he said. "There will always be loans available to students."

After being selected to the Kansas Cagerz, a United States Basketball League team, he moved to be part of the Athletic Union of Larissa in Greece, where he played from 2005-06. During his first season, he was the leading rebounder in the Greek League.

Massey then moved to Aris BC, another Greek team, where he was declared the Most Spectacular Basketball Player of the Euroleague during the 2006-07 season. He received 52 percent of the votes in a bracket-style elimination vote. More than 10,000 fans voted to give him the honor. He also was the Greek League's All-Star Game MVP in 2008. excitement, take a deep breath and relax before you share your excitement. Give it some time, and then your answer will come out, and you can accept and say, 'I really appreciate the offer' or even ask them some more questions so that you can have the opportunity to back out.

The employer needs the opportunity to tell you what the salary will be and other details, so be attentive. Contain excitement 'til both parties know all the details, then you can say 'yes.'"

How do students juggle multiple job offers, and what should they say that would be polite?

"I think what you have to find out from the employer that has extended the offer is when do they need the answer to accepting the offer. You need to know because you have to find out if they are taking the approach to knowing on the spot, or if they can give you a week or month to decide.

Remember to be most respectful of the timeline they have given you.

Once you know their deadline for accepting their offer you will know how much time can wait for the other job offers and think which would be best. If that you can negotiate a deadline and say, "as a graduate student, this is a big decision for me and I need to share this with my family and people that have guided me. Could I call you back tomorrow?" You can make it a request for a deadline, and they can say 'yes' or 'no.'

If you have any reservations about the job and they are pressuring, I would say no because you have to feel comfortable especially when you know they need the answer right on the spot."

Fraternities to host annual Sunset Revival benefit concert on Saturday

by Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On one Saturday out of each year, the front lawn of Sigma Nu fraternity is transformed into a stomping ground for a major music festival. Stages appear, fences go up and excitement around the K-State community builds as students prepare for a day full of friends, music and fundraising.

Sunset Revival, organized by Sigma Nu and Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternities, is a festival-style concert that raises money for the Christopher Reeve Foundation.

This year, the festival will include 11 bands, with the Mikey Needleman Band serving as the marquee act.

"As usual, there will be two stages," said Addison Price, junior in marketing.

Price, who will attend his third Revival on Saturday, said not much has changed between this year's festival and previous years.

The main differences, he said, are the cost of the concert shirts and the number of sponsors that offered to help.

"You just have to do better than last year," Price said.

New sponsors this year include Monster Energy Drink, Vitamin Water and Chipotle.

Every year, the organizers design a T-shirt that almost all concert-goers wear. This year's shirt price is $20, which is higher than last year because the event's organizers wanted to book better bands and raise more money, Price said.

"You get in all day [with the shirts]," Price said.

Shirts have been available for purchase all week, and some students are already wearing them around campus. The shirts sold to the general public are purple, but those worn by members of the participating fraternities are black tie-dye.

Kyle Davis, freshman in pre-professional business administration, said Sigma Nu began setting up for the event at the beginning of the week, but the preparations begin one to two months before the actual festival. There is a lot of work involved in putting the event together, Davis said, but his fraternity brothers are very good about helping each other out.

Ashley Kracht, sophomore in graphic design, will attend her first Revival this year, and said she is looking forward to the time she will spend with friends.

"Everyone talks it up so much and says how much fun it is," she said.

2008 STATE ELECTIONS

Campus political figures discuss candidates

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two years ago, Nancy Boyda won the Second Congressional District seat as part of a wave of Democratic turnover across the country. This year, two prominent Republicans are trying to regain the seat in what could be one of the most competitive House races in the country.

Joe Aistrup, head of the Department of Political Science and Kansas politics expert, said Republicans and Democrats all across the country and political pundits have the Second District on their "watch lists" for possible new representatives.

Aistrup said though Boyda has traveled all over the district and rallied hard for support, the district has strong Republican tendencies that could derail her status as a favorite in the November election.

Though Pat Roberts has been a member of the Senate for almost 10 years and is expected to retain his seat, Jim Slattery, who served 12 years as Second District representative, announced on Tuesday he will enter the race.

Aistrup said Slattery has much catching up to do, as he is just starting his campaign and has little contributions so far.

Democrats, though, hope he can make the race tighter than it has been in the past.

PAT ROBERTS
Kansas senator

RESPONSE FROM THE CAMPAIGN TO K-STATE COMMUNITY
Kansas has a great number of highly respected educational institutions. At the top of that list is Kansas State University. As an alumnus, it's a particular honor for me to be able to work in Washington for the policies and programs to make the university the best it can be for our students and faculty.

JOE AISTRUP
head of the Department of Political Science
In this race, Jim Slattery is the underdog. Pat Roberts already has a campaign war chest in the millions whereas Slattery is just starting to get his campaign contributions together.

BRYAN COX,
co-president of the K-State Young Democrats and junior in political science
Pat comes from Kansas, but he really hasn't been in Kansas for a long time. He's essentially lived in D.C. for 20 years for what I've been told ... I don't really think that he's done his job like it should have been done.

RYAN WILLCOTT
president of K-State College Republicans and freshman in business administration
Pat Roberts is not as much in the forefront as other Republican candidates because he is an incumbent, but experience is key for him. I am yet to see a Democrat that might have the potential to unseat him.

NANCY BOYDA
Second District representative since January 2007

CAMPAIGN
Rep. Boyda has been the most accessible, active member of Congress in recent Second District history. She participated in more than 300 public events in Kansas last year, answered over 60,000 constituent questions via the mail and helped more than 2,000 Kansans fix their case-work problems with the government.

AISTRUP
She is on everybody's watch list. She has a couple of things going for her. She has worked the district really hard. And after a rough start ... she seems to have caught her stride. She seems to be hard at work on constituency service. She is doing all the things freshmen do to secure their long-term place as a member of the House.

COX
She stood strong and did not cave like many freshmen Democrats did on giving amnesty to telecom companies that essentially violated civil rights of American citizens. She stood up for the principles in which she ran and was elected on and that's an honorable thing.

WILLCOTT
Her stance on national security is something that people really need to focus on. Not to mention she voted for the largest tax increase in U.S. history at $683 billion. Our generation is already buried in student loans with it not looking good for our social security, and now she wants all of the money we're not paying loans back in to go into taxes?

JIM RYUN
Second District representative from 1996-2006

CAMPAIGN
Jim Ryun hopes to continue his partnership with Kansas State that has resulted in numerous grants for the university and the passage of legislation that uses technology developed by K-State to protect our ports from terrorist attacks.

AISTRUP
He might be working the district harder now than he did as a representative. He has done everything he can to build up his base of support in the Republican primary constituency. He is well-liked in that constituency, but there is the stigma with losing a race. There is a sentiment from some Republicans in this district that he had his chance and that somebody else deserves a shot at beating Boyda.

COX
I would say that looking at the way things are, in 2006 there was the beginning of a rising Democratic tide, and in 2008, I think that all the indicators are showing that that has only strengthened. So, if he lost two years ago, I don't think that he has much of a chance to win this year.

WILLCOTT
After Ryun's loss in 2006 he knows what needs to be done to gain his seat back this year, and the way it sounds he is ready to do it. His experience will also do a lot in his favor, but past votes may be used against him also.

LYNN JENKINS
Kansas state treasurer

CAMPAIGN
As the only K-Stater and the only K-State football and basketball season ticket holder in this [Second District] race, I am extremely proud of my university and would dedicate myself to preserving K-State as the highly respected state university that it is... I believe that the central themes of my campaign-lower taxes, reduced spending, and secure borders-will help spur our nation's economic growth and increase jobs available for grads after they leave K-State.

AISTRUP
Lynn Jenkins is typically associated more with what I call the Bill Graves moderate wing, which is really not all too moderate in Kansas. I expect her to make it a very heated race.

COX
From what I've heard, people are thinking she's probably going to win the primary, but it's really one that's up in the air. I've actually heard both ways, but I've heard more people say she'll win the primary because people don't think that Jim Ryun has anything new to offer.

WILLCOTT
Jenkins' work as state treasurer will give her a solid stance, but I think since she has received a few endorsements from pro-choice organizations it might scare some Republicans away.

NBAF has involved KSU health dept. minimally

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This is the third article in a four-part series examining K-State as a proposed site for the National Bio and Agro-Defense Facility, the facility's purpose and its potential effects on Manhattan residents and the K-State community if Manhattan is selected in October 2008.

K-State's Department of Environmental Health and Safety has had minimal involvement with Manhattan and K-State as one of six proposed sites for the National Agro and Bio-Defense Facility.

The department worked with other university and city departments to provide information for the NBAF Environmental Impact Statement draft, said Steven Galitzer, director of K-State's Department of Environmental Health and Safety.

"I really haven't been that involved with NBAF," Galitzer said. "My department has only been ancillary, because we've been asked for a lot of different information

A total of 10 people were arrested when Manhattan area police executed nine search warrants Wednesday evening.

The Riley County Police Department, the Pottawatomie County Sheriff's Office and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation carried out the searches in various locations around Manhattan between 7 and 11:30 p.m. RCPD Investigations Division Commander Tim Hegarty said the operation was part of one specific ongoing investigation into the distribution and sale of marijuana and crack cocaine in the Manhattan and Riley County area.

Speeches promote campus changes

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students exercised their constitutional right to free speech by addressing topics for change at K-State, like a better recycling program, parking issues, concealed carry on campus and the quality of services at Lafene Health Center, on Thursday afternoon in Nichols Theatre.

Three students were chosen from each of the two sections of the class Public Speaking II, and the six students performed their speeches in front of an audience of about 50 students.

"This is how I find out what's on students' minds," said Phil Anderson, speech instructor. "I don't restrict them from topics."

After they finished their persuasive speeches, students asked the audience to sign a petition. This petition will be given to Student Senate for support of their causes.

Justin McClarty, junior in accounting, began the program with a speech about Lafene.

The objective of McClarty's speech differed from others' goals because he asked audience members to join a committee. His proposed committee would work with Lafene on budget expenses and providing more quality service for students.

Stephen Wiemers, sophomore in pre-professional business administration, tried to persuade students to sign a petition allowing students to carry weapons on campus to avoid tragedies like the Virginia Tech shooting. Wiemers argued that leaving K-State as a non-firearms campus makes it an open target to shooters.

Some students suggested new programs to address old issues.

"The recycling program at K-State is over 20 years old," said Kelsey Callaway, junior in animal sciences and industry, as she tried to convince her audience to sign a petition that would add $1 to students' tuition in order to fund a K-State recycling program.

The campus-parking situation has been a hot topic of discussion this year, and the issue was addressed once more during the event by each student offering a fresh solution.

Jordan McFall, junior in business management, suggested K-State and the city of Manhattan collaborate to run a city-wide shuttle system.

The system would eliminate the campus shuttle bus and Safe Ride, and though students' tuition would increase by $14 per semester, students would only need to show their student ID to ride the bus, McFall said.

"[The parking situation] definitely makes me see there is a need for change," he said.

Other students had more radical approaches to issues on campus.

"The KSU athletics department needs more funding, and booze in the stadium is the answer," said Chris Hedberg, senior in golf course management.

Selling alcohol in the non-student section would give the athletic department the money it needs to recruit more athletes, he said.

Brian Lee, junior in agronomy, discussed K-State's discontinued botany class.

"Biology is not botany and does not help agronomy students," he said as he tried to persuade the audience to sign a petition to restart a botany class at K-State.

Audience members were given the opportunity to ask questions after each speaker.

"I signed three petitions," said Levi Nichols, audience member and senior in animal sciences and industry. "I thought it was good that students are recognizing the problems at KSU and doing something about it."

22 SGA positions appointed at semester's final Senate meeting

By Michael Champlin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senators appointed 22 students to fill open positions in Student Governing Association Thursday night at the spring semester's final Student Senate meeting. These students will serve on one of the four judicial boards including Student Tribunal, Student Review Board, Parking Citations Appeals Board and Judicial Council.

Lauren Bauman, senior in elementary education, was appointed to serve as public relations director for the student body president's cabinet. The public-relations director is responsible for enhancing distribution of information for the executive branch and formulating communication strategies between the student body president, Student Senate, and the student body, according to the SGA Web site. Bauman will also serve as a member of the Senate University Relations Committee.

Student Senate voted in favor of creating the special committee to review plans for the Peters Recreation Complex by a vote of 54-0-0. The committee will meet with architects during the summer and provide student input during the planning and design phases of the Rec Complex expansion. The committee will consist of seven students total, including Student Senate Chair Amy Schultz, junior in biology, Student Body President Lydia Peele, senior in mathematics education, and the following five students: Michael Bell, senior in architectural engineering; Kayla Horsky, sophomore in family studies and human services; Addison Kirkland, sophomore in family studies and human services; Robert Swift, junior in political science; and Danny Unruh, sophomore in food science and industry.

Senators also appointed Molly McGuire, freshman in political science, as a student senator in order to fill a vacancy in the College of Arts and Sciences.

During the open period, Moriah Wagner, senior in women's studies, spoke about the progress of the Good Neighbors program. The program focuses on improving communities near campus. Brian Williams, representative for the City of Manhattan, worked closely with Wagner during the past year.

"We've had a great amount of students involved so far," Williams said. "This program doesn't work without student involvement."

He encouraged the senators to get involved beyond campus into the community.

Student Senate is scheduled to meet again at 7 p.m. on September 4.

Blame game

Generations argue responsibility for U.S. fiscal failures

MARQUIS CLARK

I was watching TV the other day when I saw an absolutely outrageous commercial. Perhaps you've seen it – Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi and former Speaker Newt Gingrich are sitting on a couch talking about the environment. The commercial itself doesn't become alarming until the very end when Gingrich makes the following statement: "If enough of us demand action from our leaders, we can spark the innovation we need."

I'm sorry; I thought you people were our leaders, but maybe I'm mistaken. So I decided to take a trip in the "way-back" machine and check up on the Democratic Congress that was supposed to be the answer to the big, bad Republican government.

According to CNN, in 2006, Pelosi repeatedly threatened that once the Democrats took control of the House, "the president will have to have a different attitude now that he won't have a rubber-stamp Congress." She said she would push for action implementing all 9/11 Commission recommendations on national security, raising the minimum wage to $7.25, eliminating corporate subsidies for oil companies, allowing the government to negotiate Medicare drug prices, imposing new restrictions on lobbyists, cutting interest rates on college loans and supporting embryonic stem-cell research, all in the first 100 hours of her time as Speaker.

Of course, this Congress has rubber-stamped the largest federal budget in world history, consistently approved funding for the wars in the Middle East, and continued the same national security programs. Medical costs are still prohibitively high, and my college loan rate for grad school is higher than the one from my undergraduate years.

I personally take offense to members of the "greatest generation" and aging "baby boomers" somehow implying that this mess – the climate, the recession, the debt – is somehow my generation's fault. You mean to tell me I'm responsible for generations of government wastefulness? Apparently, it is my fault that the U.S. didn't change its energy policy during the oil crisis in the 1970s, before I was born. And the idea that I should be excited to vote in an election to help a select few families from a select few schools pass power from generation to generation is downright insulting. When they've run the world into the ground and we small-town folk all have gone away, imagine that doomsday shelter – Chelsea Clinton and the Bush twins drawing straws for who has to repopulate with the Walton boys and Bill Gates' kid.

I even went online to check out one of those nifty national debt clocks and almost passed out after watching it for a few minutes. I don't think I fully appreciated the sheer volume of debt our legislative and executive branches have racked up. We'll never be able to pay it off during our lifetimes, let alone the lifetimes of those who created it. My grandchildren will be paying off debt from this administration (congressional and executive) with their income taxes.

The worst part of all this is the idea that the major political battles are between Kansas conservatives and liberals. While a few elites are passing the presidency back and forth like a party favor, we've been pitted against one another. Billionaires and millionaires have convinced us that our religious differences are more important than our class similarities. So I say, no more party politics. No more accepting whomever the popular media nominates. No more letting wedge issues distract us from seeing the ways in which our power to affect the direction of our country is being eroded.

I'm connected to millions of people via different digital media outlets, a luxury never enjoyed before in history. I simply refuse to believe that armed with the truth and the digital age, we cannot make a difference and change the direction of our country.

Stricter gun-control laws only slow law-abiding citizens

BRANDON STEINERT

For some reason, people are terrified of guns. Just the word "guns" has negative connotations, but guns are only dangerous if used improperly.

I own a handgun, as do most of my friends. The most we do with them is go out to a shooting range and practice target shooting.

Sure, they're great for home defense, but I bought my gun primarily to go shooting on the weekends, which is more fun than most might think. If you haven't tried it, I recommend visiting Fancy Creek Shooting Range, which is run by volunteers.

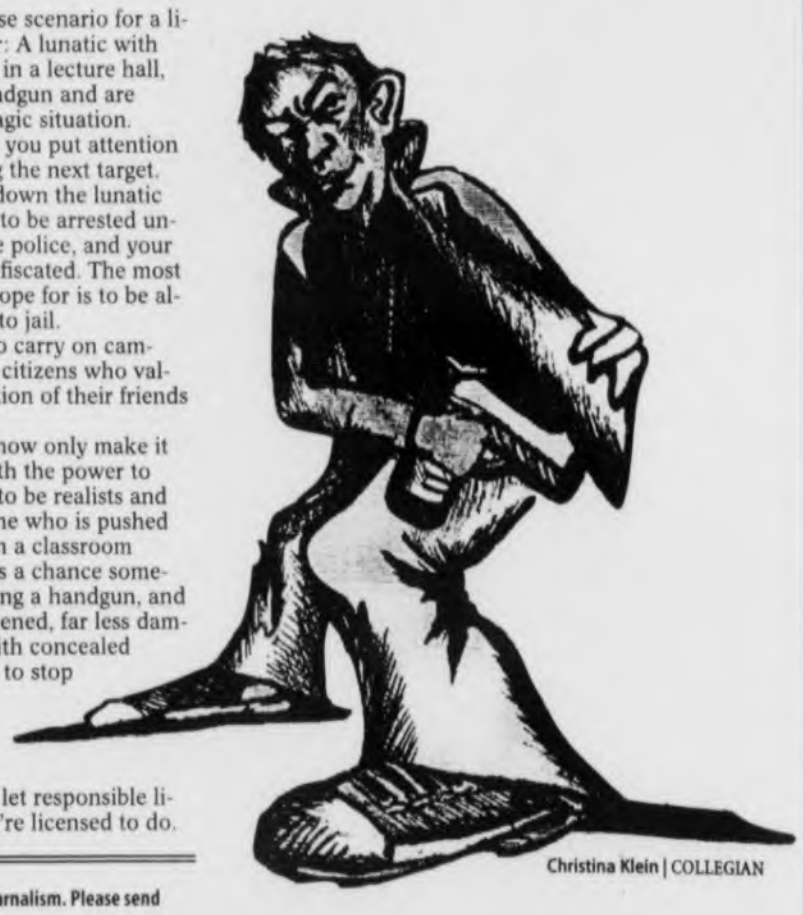
While you're there, volunteers might tell you they have guns, "not weapons." That's the mentality of most firearms collectors and recreationists. Every skeptic I've taken with me to the shooting range has left with a completely different attitude; most ask when we can go back again.

So much controversy surrounds the touchy issue of concealed carry on campus, which perplexes me. Those willing to go through the lengthy process of acquiring such a license should and will understand the responsibility that comes with it.

If licensed-weapon owners decide to pull their weapons, whether it be to protect themselves or other people, they should keep one thought in mind. Pulling a gun is a lose-lose, "I hope I leave like I came," situation.

Let's look at the worst-case scenario for a licensed concealed carry owner: A lunatic with a gun starts shooting students in a lecture hall, and you have a concealed handgun and are caught in the middle of the tragic situation.

If you pull your handgun, you put attention on yourself and risk becoming the next target.



Let's say you've brought down the lunatic – now what? You can expect to be arrested until events are sorted out by the police, and your handgun probably will be confiscated. The most anyone in this situation can hope for is to be allowed to leave without going to jail.

So why do people want to carry on campus? Maybe they're just good citizens who value their rights and the protection of their friends and classmates.

The restrictions in place now only make it easier for criminals. Those with the power to change these laws should try to be realists and look at the facts. I'd bet anyone who is pushed far enough to start shooting in a classroom would think twice if there was a chance someone in the room was concealing a handgun, and even if the shooting still happened, far less damage would be done if those with concealed handguns were brave enough to stop him or her.

K-State doesn't need hundreds of thousands of dollars to be spent on a security system. It just needs to let responsible licensed students do what they're licensed to do.

Wendy's on the east side of town sucks. Don't ever eat there.

To the hot Czech kids in my commodities class: If you wanted to stay in America, I would marry you.

Dear dancing girls on Bluemont: When will you be dancing again?

To the guy on the corner of College and Kimball at 4:40: Those purple shorts are entirely too short. They're meant for women.

If she needs a gallon of foundation, then give me two gallons of beer.

Dude, is that your sister out in left field naked? Dude, she's naked. Think she'll go out with me?

Hey, the duck races are on Sunday. Make sure you guys be there.

Hey, Fourum: Want to see my water gun?

The campus cops really do brake for squirrels. I just saw it. It was awesome.

This is ResNet. We love you all.

To the loud guy looking for his bulldog outside my apartment: If I find it first, I'm killing it.

Some guys have all the luck with the ladies. It's 12:45 and the last 45 minutes have proved why I am and continue to be single.

Listening to General Myers talk has been the single greatest achievement of my entire life.

I'm calling from Hawaii. I miss all you back at K-State. Go Cats.

To the girl who just called from Hawaii: You are trash.

My roommate wants to run her fingers through Blake Young's hair.

Calling it disc golf doesn't make it any less stupid. You're playing Frisbee.

My drunk roommate on Wednesday night keeps calling the Fourum and I keep watching. Thought I should call too. Peace.

ResNet owns Geek Squad. ResNet for the win.

This is ResNet. We have no people skills.

I hope these ResNet people don't get paid, because they do a really crappy job.

Have you thanked a house mom today?

You've just got two coconuts and you're banging them together.

This is ResNet. On behalf of them, I would like to call and say that we all suck at life and we do really manage the network.

Your paper makes better toilet paper than it does reading material.

FEEDBACK

Caller confuses skulls

Friday's To the Point column features the editorial board's favorite and least favorite Fourum comments throughout the week. The board members will state their opinions about selected Fourum comments.

"So I'm sorry, but I'm not sorry. For the 'Ask the Fifth Year' column, Adam Reichenberger should be the only one who writes it. And you should have an 'Ask the Grad Student' column next year, too."

We're only sorry that Adam didn't submit his column. We would have an "Ask the Grad Student," but they're all too busy calling the Fourum.

"I found a skull in the woods. I got really curious about it. I wondered who this person was, and why they had deer horns."

Any more questions?

"To the girl that sits behind me in my human development class: I read your AIM convo's every day. Your friends are right. Your boyfriend's a jerk, and you should break up with him."

How do you read the conversations when she is sitting behind you? Do you not face forward?

"Matt Combes: I dare you not to talk about sex in your next article."

Since Matt Combes is a sex columnist, we're guessing the topic won't change.

Local believers pray with nation

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY

Local pastors of all denominations led Manhattan residents in prayer for observance of the 57th National Day of Prayer Thursday.

Darryl Martin, pastor of Manhattan Christian Fellowship, served as master of ceremonies for the day's events, which included an hour-long prayer service at the Riley County Courthouse plaza and walks through the park every half hour. The day's purpose was to pray for local, state and national leaders to make good decisions, Martin said.

He said he was pleased with the attendance but wished more people would have come. He said it's usually difficult for people to work around their schedules in the middle of the day. The reason the events continue all day is to provide opportunities for people to work prayer time into their schedules.

The prayer service was broken into five portions, each devoted to different concerns.

Barb Laflin, pastor at Keats and Riley United Methodist Churches, led the prayer for national leaders and the military. Martin said Laflin was instrumental in the organization for the day's events and has been planning it every year for a few years.

Dick Miller of Harbor Church led a prayer for the leaders in Kansas, and local government leaders were prayed for by Tim Gotchey, pastor of College Heights Baptist Church. He mentioned the city commission, county commission, court system and emergency services.

Rick Henderson, director of Central Kansas Youth For Christ, said prayers for the local schools, including K-State.

Observation of the National Day of Prayer, described by organizers as a day to pray and reflect on the United States, its leaders and its people, took place at the Riley County Courthouse Plaza Thursday afternoon. During the event, people talked in small groups and listened to speakers.

Biological anthropologist informs campus about racial misconception

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Combining his knowledge in anthropology and biology, Shomarka O.Y. Keita made his case to K-State students, faculty and the surrounding community that racial groups have no biological differences Thursday afternoon in the K-State Student Union's Forum Hall.

The lecture was designed to inform an audience consisting of people from many different cultural backgrounds that race is not a factor in human variation.

"We have taken physical traits and made much more of them than we should be," Keita said. "Race has nothing to do with evolution–it has nothing to do with history and that's my main point."

Keita's lecture was complemented by a detailed PowerPoint presentation that displayed his research and told of areas where the concept of race has been used incorrectly.

Keita said the term "race" has been invalidly used in regards to social, political, anthropological, genetical and subspecies categories.

"When you hear someone say race is constructed, you need to stop and ask them what they mean," he said. "We have to follow the rules of evidence for anything we want to present."

The event ended with a question-and-answer period to foster more dialogue on the subject.

Juanita McGowan, assistant dean of diversity for the College of Arts and Sciences, asked Keita if the word "race" should be avoided.

Keita responded by giving an example of how Barack Obama is identified as African-American instead of Kenyan-American, though his father is from Kenya. He said people are beginning to focus on race more than their own cultural background.

"Only in particular situations do people make anything of their physical traits," he explained. "Race describes

TRACK AND FIELD

K-State to compete at home

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Wildcats will be host to the Ward Haylett Invitational, the team's only outdoor home meet of the season. The meet is scheduled to start with the women's hammer throw at 11 a.m. at R.V. Christian Track.

GROVES

The invitational is also the main event of the team's reunion weekend, which invites former athletes, friends and family back to Manhattan.

"It's really exciting to be at home because then all of our friends and family that live around here get to come and watch everybody," said sophomore thrower Loren Groves. "This weekend is the alumni meet, so there are a few throwers that graduated a few years back that are going to come and watch, so that's really exciting."

Though the invitational does not attract crowds as large as other historic meets the Wildcats have competed in this season, it is always nice to have a home crowd, said senior jumper Bryce Bergman. "The crowd is a huge thing, especially for me in the pole vault," he said.

While the meet offers the Wildcats the only opportunity of the outdoor season to stay at home, Rovelto said he wouldn't want to host many meets.

"I think if you host a lot of meets, it can wear and tear on your own staff that have to be involved in putting it on," Rovelto said. "In the end, it would probably get a little old if you were home all the time, but occasionally I think it's great."

The Wildcats have not competed at home in the outdoor season since they hosted the Ward Haylett Invitational in 2006, but they hope to gain an edge over the competition by competing at their own facilities.

While competing at home provides a welcome relief from travel, it also can create an opportunity for the Wildcats to lose focus.

"It's always really nice to know that you get to stay in your own bed the night before a meet instead of a hotel, but sometimes it seems like we are more lax and not as focused as we would be if we were away," Groves said. "I pretty much try to do what I would do before any other meet."

The Wildcats have been chasing good weather on the road all outdoor season and are looking forward to good weather at their own track.

"I think it will be a good change," Bergman said. "We haven't really had any good weather this year, yet."

While some events will be more competitive than others, Rovelto said overall, the meet should draw quality competitors. He said the meet used to pit K-State vs. Nebraska, with the colleges rotating as host schools, but the regional qualifying format means the meet attracts more schools.

"Years ago, this meet was basically a duel between us and Nebraska, and it was awesome," Rovelto said. "I mean it was a very good, high quality meet."

Strong season propels lacrosse team to playoffs

By Justin Nutter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a 1-0 victory over in-state rival Pittsburg State on April 19, the K-State men's lacrosse team will play in the Great Rivers Lacrosse Conference playoffs against Missouri on Saturday in St. Louis, Mo.

The Wildcats' playoff berth was assured by a 4-1 record in conference play. Coach A.J. Besik said a pre-season decision to split the conference into two sub-divisions worked to K-State's benefit in the long run.

"I was very happy with the way the conference split worked out," said Besik, who is in his third season with the Wildcats. "We were very competitive, and we went 4-1 in our sub-division and tied for first, so we're headed to the conference playoffs."

He said K-State will take on a very talented Missouri team.

"Missouri's a very athletic and very good lacrosse team," he said. "They draw a lot of talent."

Sophomore midfielder Ben Coughlin echoed his coach's thoughts.

"Missouri's team is pretty strong," said Coughlin, a native of Olathe, Kan. "Their defense has some pretty big guys, and they run a lot of man-on-man."

Coughlin said the Tigers' defensive scheme could work to K-State's advantage.

"That's actually pretty good, because we have a lot of fast guys," he said. "I think we match up pretty well with them."

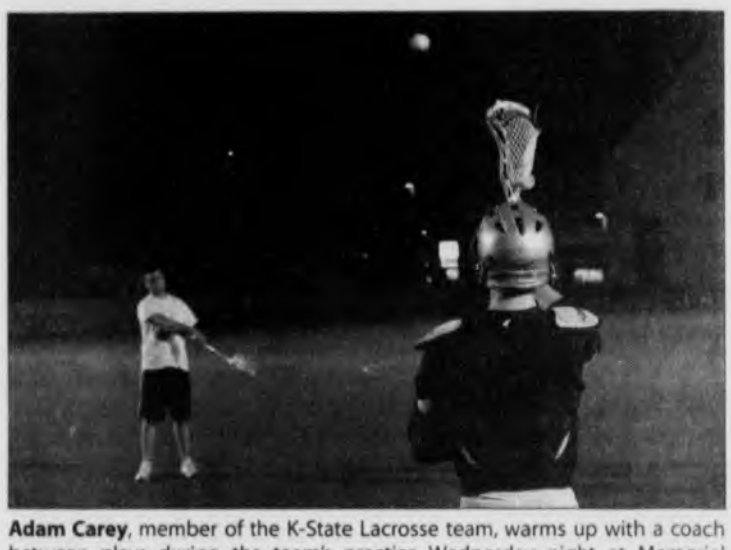
Besik said depth could be an issue for the Wildcats.

"We have the athletes to run with them, but what we don't have is a deep bench," he said. "Missouri will probably bring 30 guys to the game, and we'll roll out with probably 19."

Besik said K-State's team has learned to rely on its young leaders, especially Sean Berger, who led the sub-division in points, averaging 3.77 per game.

"On offense, we rely a lot on No. 25, Sean Berger," he said. "On defense, we're relying on a pair of freshmen, Kevin Hadel and Ben Novak. Kevin's got excellent speed and he's a really smart defender."

Besik said Novak, a defender from Milwaukie, Ore., has the talent to play for a school where the lacrosse team has a higher profile.



"Ben's out of the Northwest. It's interesting," he said. "He's an outstanding athlete that probably could have gone elsewhere to play lacrosse, but he chose K-State because of the ROTC program."

Besik said Novak and Hadel, a long-stick midfielder from Lenexa, Kan., complement each other well.

Assistant coach Jay LeBoeuf said it will take a lot of drive and determination to beat Missouri.

"The guys will have to be pretty motivated," LeBoeuf, who is in his first season with the Wildcats, said. "They'll have to have a lot of heart. Missouri's definitely a big team, and it's going to be a rough game."

He said a game like this will require the whole team to put forth a solid effort.

Big 12 Invitational in Texas up next for women's rowing

By Brad Dornes
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's rowing team will travel to Texas to participate in the Big 12 Conference Invitational on Saturday. The one-day event will showcase rowing teams from K-State, Kansas and Texas.

SWEENEY

"Our mentality is to go there to upset people," coach Patrick Sweeney said. "Texas is so deep that we will have to be at our best."

Races will start at 10 a.m., and the varsity, second varsity and novice 8+ teams will be the only Wildcat teams participating.

"We are just looking to improve every day," Sweeney said. "The team has been getting faster every day over the course of the season, and I am looking for each team to go out there on Saturday and take the next step."

Sweeney also said the team is still very young and the spring weather has been detrimental to its development, but he is happy with its progress.

"I am very pleased with how the team has raced with such little water time," Sweeney said. "They haven't used the weather as an excuse to hang their heads. This team has gone out and performed and that's all I could ask of them."

Following this weekend's event, the Wildcats will compete in the NCAA Central/South Regional on May 17.

Wildcats to face No. 14 Missouri in series

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team is coming off its win against Wichita State Tuesday, and now looks to win two straight games against ranked opponents as they travel to Columbia, Mo., to face No. 14 Missouri at 6:30 tonight at Simmons Field.

When the Wildcats set foot on the Tigers' field tonight, it will mark the seventh-straight game they will have played against a ranked opponent.

Missouri (29-15) comes into the contest on a bit of a losing skid, having lost five straight games, including a sweep at the hands of No. 5 Texas A&M last weekend in College Station. In their most recent game at Kauffman Stadium the Tigers fell to the Kansas Jayhawks, 3-0.

The Tigers will look to bounce back against the Wildcats while trying to find the team they had throughout the whole season. Missouri comes into the weekend as the sixth-best hitting team in the conference with a .295 average, 85 doubles, eight triples, 35 home runs and 292 RBI.

K-State (21-23) looks to keep its momentum from Tuesday's game at Wichita State. The Wildcats held off the Shockers on their home field and won, 3-2. Wichita State had chances to come back, but the Wildcat bullpen was able to shut down the Shocker bats when they needed it the most.

The Wildcats will try to continue their successful baserunning and look to their pitching to perform at the same high level.

K-State continues to lead the Big 12 Conference in stolen bases with 84, 14 steals better than second-place Texas Tech. The Wildcats are second in the Big 12 and 17th nationally with a 3.0 walks-per-nine-innings ratio. The current mark would rank second behind the school record of 2.3 in 2006.

The Wildcats have a three game series with the Tigers and then come home to Tointon Family Stadium to play the Arizona State Sundevils in a Tuesday mid-week game.

Basics of photography

Best shots need details, focus

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For students who want to take pictures with more artistic value than the average Facebook.com-worthy snapshot, knowledge and a willingness to experiment are essential.

William J. Adams, professor of journalism and mass communications, said students should first find a camera with at least five mega-pixels so photos can be printed in a larger size.

Anika Bergh, junior in fine arts, said she tries to find objects that no one else sees or are overlooked every day and emphasizes their beauty in her photos.

She said items in nature, especially flowers, are always interesting. Architecture also is a good subject for beginners because buildings are often aesthetically pleasing and organized.

Bergh said taking pictures is about emphasizing details.

"Texture in everything is interesting," Bergh said. "All the color, all the basic components of everyday life make for a good emphasis on a photo."

Some might worry about learning how to override the automatic aspects of a digital camera, like the lighting, f-stop and shutter speed to try new angles for a picture. With most digital cameras, users do not have to know how to change the lighting or shutter speed because the camera will do it automatically.

Finding a camera can be difficult, especially if people are using it for artistic reasons, Bergh said. It is best to go to to a specialized store so clerks can help new photographers find a camera that will fit their needs. They also can help buyers learn how to use their new camera.

Greg Patterson, owner of GP's Photography in Wichita, said he would recommend people start out with a Nikon or Canon camera.

"Don't buy a point-and-shoot camera; you should buy a digital srl [single lens reflexive] camera," Patterson said. "What is good about digital is you can delete the pictures you don't like and re-try."

Nikon and Canon are the leading camera makers, Patterson said, and he suggested not buying any other because the technology is not as effective.

Though Patterson owns his own studio, he said he started off teaching himself how to take photographs by taking pictures all the time, especially with his family members.

He started off small by taking pictures at fraternity and sorority parties and his business grew from there.

Patterson said when he started out he took pictures of flowers to determine the depth of field and to learn how to tell if the picture was in focus. For beginners, action shots are more difficult to master.

Taking a digital photography class or just playing around with the camera yourself is the best way to learn. Photoshop could help you edit or manipulate work. A Photoshop class, Patterson said, could be beneficial for people to understand how they can alter a picture.

Patterson said those wanting to learn more about photography should look at what others have done, try to figure out how they did it and take pictures all the time.

"You have to be confident and shoot, shoot, shoot until you get it right how you want it to look," he said.

Beginning photographers should start out by getting a camera that has at least five mega-pixels so photos can be printed in a larger size.

GENERAL PHOTOGRAPHY GUIDES:

Set auto — it is easier when the camera is set on auto because the camera detects your setting, instead of users having to play around with the setting and missing a photo opportunity.

Keep it simple — instead of trying to shoot a whole crowd, work on just one person.

Easy subjects for beginners are buildings, which do not move, and children and pets, who often forget a photographer is present; shooting candid photographs is easy and fun, plus natural reactions are priceless.

Avoid working with teenagers and young adults because they are self-conscious.

Shoot in familiar areas with familiar people, like at home with your family.

'GTA IV' exceeds gamer's high expectations

Review by Brandon Steinert

"Grand Theft Auto IV"

Games that are truly addicting come out only so often. "The Elder Scrolls IV: Oblivion," "Splinter Cell" and "Rainbow Six Vegas" are just a few, but now gamers can happily add "Grand Theft Auto IV" to that list.

After the midnight release of the game, I played for five hours and woke up for class after just three hours of sleep. It was so worth it.

It didn't take long for the game to impress me. Even the opening credits were creative and trendy.

Niko Bellic, the main character, steps off a boat into Liberty City, a mock version of New York City. After only a few minutes into the game, Niko is forced to "whack" a couple bad guys, saying after the first one that he "promised [himself he] wouldn't kill anybody here."

The first encounter with his cousin's loan sharks lead to more blood on Niko's hands, and he eventually starts getting the attention of people higher up in the local organized crime rings.

His cousin Roman Bellic is a compulsive gambler and loves to tell tall tales, which is what drew Niko to Liberty City in the first place, along with some other more pressing matters that are revealed later in the game.

Something I found notable is the fading heads-up display. The mini-map is the only all that remains on screen at all times. The rest of the information, including the amount of cash on hand and the current weapon selected, can be brought back up with a quick press of a button. The lack of an HUD is a trendy idea many game developers are going for to give games a more cinematic feel.

The multiplayer modes are as good as expected. I only had a little time to play it, but the experience I had was incredible. In one mode, all my three friends and I had to do was reach a destination and bomb it. So we stole a helicopter. After some harsh, but hilarious, words were exchanged, a member of our party decided to leave the helicopter while in flight. He immediately regretted his decision when he learned characters don't automatically get parachutes from aircraft like they did in the previous installment.

"Grand Theft Auto IV" was predicted to set records in sales, anticipating $400 million in sales during its first week of release. Nobody will know how it will do until next month, of course, but judging by the length of the line at the midnight release Tuesday morning, it has potential.

'Mariokart' Wii falls short of previous games' standards

Review by Brendan Praeger

"Mariokart Wii"

Nintendo consoles always survive on the high quality of their first party titles, and so far, the Wii has been no exception. Recent entries in the Mario, Zelda and Metroid franchises have been excellent.

I was hoping "Mariokart Wii" would bring a similar level of excellence to one of my favorite gaming series, but so far, it seems to have fallen short.

Between classes, gainful employment and a healthy dose of "Grand Theft Auto IV," I've only spent a handful of hours with "Mariokart Wii." Sadly, I feel I've already experienced almost everything the game has to offer.

Nintendo's biggest attempt at innovation in the game, motion controls, works better than expected. After inserting the Wii remote into the plastic wheel which is included, simply turning the wheel causes the player's kart or motorcycle to turn. It works well enough to be a valid control option, but after over steering into multiple lava pits and barriers, I tossed the plastic contraption behind the couch and went with more traditional control options.

Gamers familiar with Mariokart should have no problem adapting to the controls, but power-sliding has been made ridiculously easy, taking a large amount of depth out of the game.

The gameplay also has been distilled for a casual audience, removing much of the skill and depth from previous games and replacing it with random luck. The new weapons make winning races testament to uncontrollable circumstances rather than racing prowess. The option to remove some of the less balanced weapons would have helped, but Nintendo hasn't really bought into the idea of letting gamers customize their settings. "Crash Team Racing" figured that out nearly a decade ago, so why is Nintendo late to the party?

Despite the 32 playable tracks and large list of characters, the single-player game wears thin quickly. Luckily, the multiplayer action still shines. The new coin-collecting battle mode joins the traditional balloon battle, and racing against human opponents provides enough opportunity for trash-talking and humiliation to keep things interesting.

As a party game, "Mariokart Wii" is good enough to earn a spot in most gamers' libraries, but with "Mariokart 64" available for download and "Mariokart: Double Dash" playable on the system, it's hard to recommend it for casual Nintendo fans.

UMA THURMAN TAKES THE STAND IN HER NEW YORK-STALKER CASE

Jack Jordan has been indicted on 5 counts total — the first count is attempting to commit crime of coercion in the first degree, the 2nd count is stalking in the fourth degree and counts three through five are for aggravated harassment in the second degree — all counts took place from May 2005 through August 2007. Early August 2007 was the next incident.

Uma Thurman went on vacation to the Bahamas without her kids — they were with their dad.

She got a message at her hotel to call, "the sister of a friend I went to school with — she was staying at my home in NYC while I was away, and she told me she was upset. A man had come to the house and left notes and I asked his name and she told me, 'Jack Jordan.'"

"I felt sick – I felt nauseous," Thurman testified.

Thurman's house guest (Ms. Hoffler) then read Thurman the notes – Ms. Hoffler also told her that the man was on their stoop and refused to leave and when she threatened to get police, he left.

"I felt terrified," Thurman continued. "I couldn't believe he came back and I thought, 'It could be much worse.'"

Answers:

If you chose mostly A's – You're the adventurous type and your diamond will accompany you everywhere, whether you're out on the town or trailing down the ski slopes.

If you want your engagement ring to be as spontaneous and carefree as you, try your luck with a round solitaire diamond set in a thick gold or platinum band. Another popular style favored by the sporty is an eternity band–a wedding band filled with diamonds. Although once reserved for significant anniversaries, this style has now moved into the mainstream realm of engagement rings.

If you chose mostly B's – Chic is your middle name and everyone will know that as soon as they lay eyes on your engagement ring. The classic trendsetter, you should look for round- or square-shaped diamonds in a channel setting. While diamonds remain the most-popular stone choice, contemporary pieces might use recently perfected diamond alternatives like moissanite and cubic zirconia. The number of stones also varies in contemporary engagement rings. Contemporary engagement rings generally have only one large stone, though it might be accented with a number of smaller gems. Three stone engagement rings with three larger stones are also growing in popularity among the contemporary. Intricate metalwork is also a common feature of this type of design–hearts, words, and symbols are often integrated into the setting's arch or along the band itself.

If you chose mostly C's – You want people to know how edgy you are as soon as they see your engagement ring. As a modernist, you enjoy custom settings with swirls and accent stones. Many modern rings are set high on decorative mountings that include sharp, distinct edges. Ultra-modern designs tend to include more of the rare and expensive fancy colored diamonds. Modern-looking rings also usually have wide- or stone-encrusted bands. Bezel-settings, tension settings or flush settings often form the foundation for modern engagement rings. Sometimes stones are interlocked to give a seamless and prong-free look–this setting is referred to as invisible setting and is very fashionable among modernists. White metals (platinum, white gold, titanium) or combinations of white and yellow with a matte finish also create the modern look.

If you chose mostly D's – Never one for frills, you prefer the look of simple elegance. Slip your finger into a classic brilliant solitaire diamond in a 4- or 6-prong Tiffany setting: If round is not your shape of preference, try an emerald-cut solitaire on for size. Other classic looks in engagement rings include a brilliant stone flanked by tapered baguettes, an emerald-cut stone adorned with smaller emerald-cut baguettes, and pear-shaped diamonds in any setting.

If you chose mostly E's – As an antique lover, you have an appreciation for the finer details and craftsmanship of yesteryear. Nowadays, cushion and asscher cut diamonds often create the centerpiece for antique engagement rings in an intricate diamond bezel setting or a finely braided metal band. Other more rare vintage diamond cuts include: The Old Mine Cut–a square-cut diamond with gently rounded corners and brilliant-style facets. The Old European Cut–same as the old mine cut, but round in shape. The Rose Cut–a vintage diamond cutting style, with brilliant-type facets arranged in groups that make the gemstone resemble an opening rosebud.

Brides should keep cool during summer with up-dos, plenty of water, sunscreen

SARAH RASMUSSEN

Many people believe their wedding day is the best day of a their life, so summer brides might want to remember these tips for tying the knot during the hottest part of the year.

Every bride should remember to stay hydrated. Try drinking water instead of soda or other sugary drinks. My favorite bottled water is "Smart Water," because it's infused with electrolytes, just like Gatorade, but it doesn't have calories, so brides won't need to worry about not fitting into their wedding dresses.

Another alternative to bottled water is a water filtration pitcher like Brita or Pur. These allow people to have access to filtered, refrigerated water anytime – users just refill the pitcher with tap water when it's running low. Of course, tap water is the most economical and eco-friendly option for brides, because it comes at a set rate and is available for refilling bottles instead of buying new ones every time.

One of the best benefits of staying hydrated is the great effects on skin. Water has been said to give skin a glow that people can't get any other way.

Summer brides also need to rethink their makeup choices. Hot weather often results in more sweat, so a good alternative to traditional liquid makeup might be the newly popular mineral powder makeup. It's lighter and does not clog pores like traditional liquid foundation does when followed with pressed powder. Also, no mascara is immune from tears or sweat, so make sure it's waterproof before it goes on eyelashes.

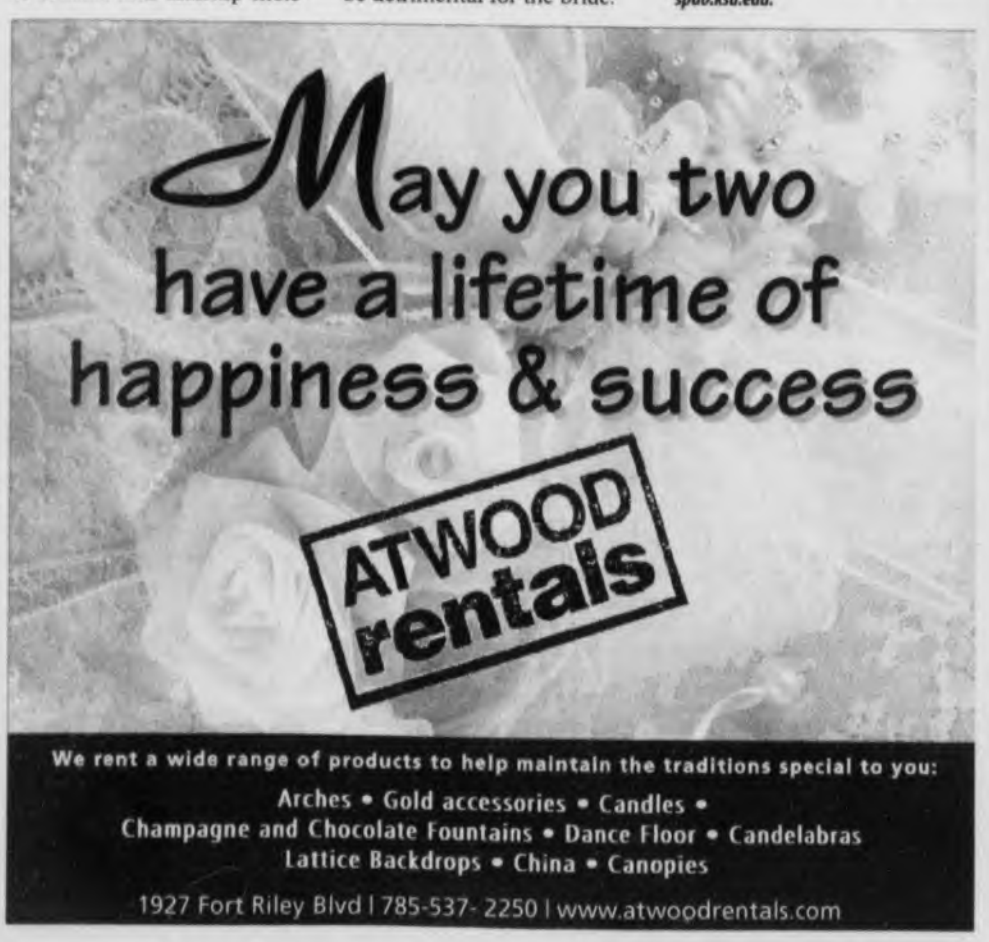
Don't forget sunscreen – brides are supposed to be glowing on their big day, not wrinkled. Most Web sites about sunscreens suggest people use a product with a sun protection factor (SPF) of 15 to 30, but people with extremely fair skin should choose an SPF of no less than 25. Dark and olive-skinned brides should remember to utilize sunscreen as well because their skin is just as susceptible to sun damage.

Unless brides have short hair, up-dos are a must for the summer bride. By getting the hair up and off the neck and back, it will bring the body temperature down and reduce sweating. Brides should never try a dramatically different hairstyle right before the wedding to avoid having pictures they do not like or being stuck with a hair style that is unfixable. The same rules apply for coloring or highlighting hair as well; just remember that any drastic changes are bad.

The same can be said for waxing – big change could be detrimental for the bride. If waxing is important to the bride, she needs to implement the three-day rule. Waxing of any body part needs to be done at least three days prior to the wedding, because even though the redness goes down, eyebrows can still look puffier than normal for up to three days after the initial wax.

Be sure to try out a spray tan, tanning bed or self-tanner before the wedding day, because looking red and sore from burning or orange and spotted from a self-tanner accident is not very attractive. Luckily for brides, most self-tanners are now gradual self-tanners, so those would be the best bet to lower chances of skin cancer and unappealing orange mistakes.

Finally, remember to allow plenty of time to break in the shoes that will accompany the dress, because unless brides want to go barefoot, shoes can make or break an evening. Even if the shoes are just a new pair of flip-flops, they still should be worn around for a day or so just to be sure they won't rub feet wrong, slip or give blisters. Brides should be able to dance all night long since it is the most joyous day in a couple's life.



Brides of summer should remember these tips to add enjoyment to their big day.

NBAF | If selected for site, facility to be up and running by fiscal year 2013

about what the impact would be and where it's going to be and other things that might be impacted by it."

Homeland Security drafted a NBAF Environmental Impact Statement based on scoping comments received from each proposed site in fall 2007. A draft of each statement will be released sometime this month and Homeland Security will have follow-up scoping meetings at each proposed site.

K-State's Department of Environmental Health and Safety, located in Edwards Hall, is responsible for compliance issues related to environmental management for air, water and waste; sanitation and water quality; occupational safety and health; industrial hygiene and toxicology; and other health- and safety-related issues.

The NBAF Biosafety Level 4 lab design would allow air pressure differentials between zones of containment and directional airflow to be exhausted toward high-efficient particulate air (HEPA) filters, according to the Department of Homeland Security's Web site.

The exhaust air would not be recirculated, and all water and air leaving the lab would be purified, according to Homeland Security's Web site.

With the construction of the Biosafety Level 3 Biosecurity Research Institute at K-State in 2006, a new sewer line was added. All air also is cleaned through filter systems before it leaves the facility, and BRI water is heat-treated before it enters the sewer system, Galitzer said.

"The stuff that comes out of the [Biosecurity Research Institute] – and what I would expect comes out of NBAF – would be sewage like any place else," Galitzer said. "It's all treated in the building to make it safe. I don't really see any impact other than increasing how much sewage is coming from that part of campus."

K-State's Department of Environmental Health and Safety, along with the University Research Compliance Office and K-State's Institutional Biosafety Committee, monitors and tracks university research.

Federal laws and regulations mandate the Institutional Biosafety Committee, which is responsible for oversight of activities with research involving microbiological agents, recombinant DNA or biological toxins. Galitzer said he is unsure if the IBC would have involvement with NBAF if Manhattan is selected.

"I really don't know. I really don't know what to expect," Galitzer said. "I would think 'no' because they will have their own biosafety group because they're outside the university. I would hope that we would have ties, that we would share information and work together on things, but I couldn't tell you what is in the mind of the federal agency."

City Commissioner Bruce Snead said the city commission is a city and state partner in several areas to secure Manhattan as the NBAF's future home.

Snead, an extension specialist in residential energy with K-State Research and Extension, also serves on the Kansas NBAF Task Force. Gov. Kathleen Sebelius leads the 45-person task force, which includes scientists, civic leaders, elected officials, industry leaders, farmers and agricultural specialists.

"I think the key responsibility that we have is in waste materials that would be processed through our waste-water treatment plant and the facility's demand for water," Snead said. "The concern, of course, is that the materials that will be coming out of the facility are processed inside of the facility – that is certainly a key question."

AN AGING FACILITY

In August 2005, Homeland Security announced it would replace the Plum Island Animal Center off eastern Long Island with the National Bio and Agro-Defense Facility.

Plum Island's 54-year-old facility is near the end of its life cycle, and the facility does not have BSL-4 capabilities to meet current and future research needs, according to Homeland Security's Web site. About 10 percent of NBAF's proposed 520,000 square feet would address BSL-4 research.

According to an Oct. 19, 2003, article in The New York Times, Plum Island Animal Disease Center officials failed to safeguard pathogens that could have been adapted as weapons of germ warfare.

The Times article cited a report from the General Accounting Office that cited failings at the disease center, including the following: door sensors and alarms that did not work, weak outside lighting, the presence of armed guards but no permission for them to use their weapons and the way in which dangerous pathogens in a biocontainment center were protected.

On April 11, the Department of Homeland Security told the U.S. House Energy and Commerce Committee that accidents occurred inside the Plum Island Animal Disease Center. The release of the viral foot-and-mouth disease into cattle holding pens in 1978 on Plum Island triggered new safety procedures. However, Homeland Security also informed House Energy and Commerce Committee members that other accidents took place inside the facility.

Galitzer said he has read media reports and accounts about Plum Island and thinks it is a personal opinion whether or not the facility should remain on an island or relocate to the U.S. mainland.

"How much do you trust what people are telling you about a facility? That's what you have to look at," Galitzer said. "Everything that I've been told is, 'Yeah, this is going to be safe.' I would hope that our federal government wouldn't put something someplace that would put our citizens at risk."

ARRESTS | Police: 'Operation began months ago'

"This operation began in the early months with patrol officers and the public," Hegarty said. "We arrived at this number within the investigation and the timing was right yesterday."

Hegarty said it is unknown whether all individuals arrested Wednesday were working together in a criminal enterprise.

He also said none of the arrests were for manufacturing drugs.

"This should serve as a notice to the public that there is a lot of drug activity in Riley County," he said. "We expect there will be more arrests from this ongoing investigation."

City Manager Ron Fehr said he is pleased with the work the police department is doing.

"Anytime the police department is making arrests, the safer Manhattan is for everyone," Fehr said.

FRIDAY FACTOID

Former VP Chalmers recalled for advancing university

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Most students probably don't know much about Chalmers Hall's namesake, John Chalmers, but he helped build K-State into the instituation it is today.

Chalmers, the vice president for academic affairs, which is now known as the provost, from 1969-80 and dean of the College of Arts and Sciences from 1963-69, died March 14 at the age of 91.

Chalmers was an administrator under President James McCain for almost two decades, helping expand K-State to a nationally prominent university.

He came to K-State in 1963 after serving as an administrator at the University of Wyoming. In an Oct. 18, 1979, Collegian article, Chalmers said he originally planned to stay only two years, but "the quality of the faculty, the programs and the student body" convinced him to stay.

During his time as dean of arts and sciences, Chalmers helped modernize several of the departments and created the Division of Biology, which incorporated the botany, zoology and microbiology departments.

During his time as an administrator, Chalmers taught an international finance class every fall. After he retired as vice president, Chalmers served as a professor of business until 1985.

In 2003, Chalmers Hall was dedicated in Chalmers' name for his contributions to the College of Arts and Sciences. The building houses several biology labs and the Terry C. Johnson Center for Basic Cancer Research.

Before the dedication, in a Nov. 15, 2002, Collegian article, Chalmers said he was honored by the distinction, but he also added a sense of humor.

"It's a very great honor, especially while I'm still alive," he said. "Usually they do these things after you're dead."

Chalmers was the last person living from the influential McCain administration that helped increase enrollment at K-State from a few thousand students to more than 15,000 and increased the numbers of degrees offered, among other accomplishments.

a level of biological differentiation."

Ana Fraire, junior in women's studies, said she thought Keita made a strong argument.

"I agree with him [Keita]," she said. "You can't just look on the outside of a person. We have to look within our DNA and see where we're from."

Fraire has a mixed ethnic background and said she understands first-hand what it's like to be categorized. She said it is important for everyone to realize that we all are more alike than we are different.

"We're all mixed, we're all related, we all come from the same people," she said.

Classic lovers

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

Brett Culbert (left), senior in theater, and Jordan Martens (right), junior in theater, were the stars of the K-State theater production of "Romeo and Juliet."

'Romeo and Juliet' stars show chemistry on stage

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fervor and emotion overtook the stage as Romeo enveloped Juliet's face in his hand, tenderly kissing her as he gazed desperately into her eyes and recited the classically romantic verses that symbolize infatuated young love.

Brett Culbert, senior in theater, portrayed the character of Romeo, and Jordan Martens, junior in theater, played the role of Juliet in the Department of Speech Communication, Theatre and Dance's rendition of the Shakespearian love story.

The show, which was performed from April 24-26 and Wednesday through Sunday at Nichols Theatre, displayed the actors' individual, theatrical talent as well as their ability to depict passionate chemistry together.

ROMEO

The part of Romeo was Culbert's first lead role at K-State, and he said he had to develop the confidence and theatrical skills needed in order to successfully execute Romeo's famous role.

Culbert said playing the part of Romeo challenged him as an actor because most of the roles he has played in the past have been more aggressive, and Romeo's character is exceedingly vulnerable.

Despite the change in roles, however, Culbert said his naturally romantic nature made him a good candidate for the role.

"I bring passion to the table," he said. "The role calls for a lot of passion, and I'm a hopeless romantic. I can really identify with the character, and there is a lot of me that lies in the character itself."

Culbert said he did not plan on getting the part of Romeo before auditions, and he went into auditions trying out for the any part. The director had him read some of Romeo's lines and gave Culbert the lead role. He said the cast practiced for about two months before opening night.

Culbert has acted for about seven years and said the most difficult aspect of playing the role is completely understanding the Shakespearian language. He also said working with Martens helped him developed his character and theatrical skills.

"Romeo and Juliet" is the third show the two thespians have been in together, and the second time they've been in an on-stage relationship.

"Jordan and I work really well together," he said. "She works when she has to work and reacts and listens well. She's challenged me and has been a lot of fun to work with."

Martens said she and Culbert used to laugh about how different they were and were surprised when they were cast as Romeo and Juliet.

"We used to always joke about how we didn't click as friends before the cast," she said. "But the more we spent time with each other, the more we began to feed off each other. Onstage, we can read each other's minds

Students, Manhattan residents celebrate Cinco de Mayo in City Park

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In a festive effort to educate the Manhattan community about Hispanic culture and celebrate Cinco de Mayo, the Hispanic Culture Committee sponsored the Cinco de Mayo festival on Sunday in City Park's Pavilion.

The free festival was the first event the committee has sponsored, and guests celebrated with Mexican food, music, dance performances and moonwalks from 2:30-5:30 on Sunday in City Park's Pavilion. The committee members said they hoped the event would interest others about Hispanic culture and better inform the Hispanic community about Manhattan's other Hispanic organizations, said Luis Sainz, chair of the committee.

"This was our inaugural event and our main goal is to try and cater to anybody, regardless of their age or race, who is interested in Hispanic culture," he said. "We're inviting any Hispanic organization who wants to share information about themselves so we can provide it to the Hispanic community. There are several Hispanic organizations available, such as Spanish Mass and Marriage for Keeps, but no one really knows about them."

Sainz said the festival provided Hispanic music entertainment, authentic Mexican food, a performance from the Cumba Cumba Colombian dance group, a Latin dance ensemble performance and moonwalks for children.

"The festival is a family oriented event and provides entertainment for people of all ages and nationalities," said Larry Hackney, vice chairman of the committee. "It's a place to learn about Hispanic culture and traditions and what the Cinco de Mayo celebration is all about. This is a festival for all people, not just those of Hispanic descent. It's for anyone who wants to have fun and learn."

Cinco de Mayo is not the celebration of the day when Mexico declared its independence from Spain, Hackney said. He said it marks the victory of the Mexican Army over the French at the Battle of Puebla and came to represent Mexican unity and patriotism. He said the holiday should also be important to Americans because its history has roots in the French Occupation of Mexico.

David Espenoza, Manhattan resident, serves nachos and other common Mexican food during a Cinco de Mayo event Sunday afternoon in City Park. The event had many types of entertainment including musical performers, Mexican clothing, food and moon bounces.

Jonathan Knight
COLLEGIAN

"It's actually more popular here than it is in Mexico," Hackney said. "It's also a link to American history."

Sainz said the committee had expected about 200 people to attend the festival. He said the celebration was enjoyable for all members of any family and hopes the committee will continue to sponsor the Cinco de Mayo event each year.

"I think the two most popular and enjoyed events here will be the bounce houses for the children and the Cumba Cumba performance for the family's older members," he said. "The Cumba Cumba performance is the high act of the event, though. We're hoping to grow the festival for future years."

Some of the event's guests said they were pleased with the celebration.

"It went really well," said Susan Greene, Abilene, Kan., resident. "We came up here because my family likes to do fun stuff on the weekends, and we're very satisfied with how it's going. The food's good, my son loves the bounce houses and it's free."

PR class to help raise HIV/AIDS awareness

By Brandon McAtee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A group of K-State students are campaigning to raise awareness about a deadly virus.

As part of the Public Relations Campaign class, the students are working with the Regional AIDS Project to inform the public about HIV/AIDS in Riley and Geary counties.

"In the class, we look into issues affecting the community," said Nancy Muturi, assistant professor in mass communications. "This is an issue that affects everybody. It is spreading. Every day there are more cases of people getting infected."

The campaign will start at 7 tonight at Auntie Mae's Parlor, 614 N. 12th St., in Aggieville.

Muturi said the campaign is focusing on communication and they have created items like brochures and flyers to help spread the word. They also supported a petition drive in the K-State Student Union to raise awareness.

Issac Madison, executive director of the regional AIDS project, said he met Muturi at

Dead week not priority for SGA

By Whitney Hodgin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is no dead week before finals this semester because the issue is not a high priority for the Student Senate, said Student Body President Lydia Peele.

When Peele, senior in education, ran for vice president with former president Matt Wagner during the 2007-08 term, they made the issue part of their academic accountability program, hoping to alleviate student stress before spring finals.

But Wagner, fifth-year in management information systems, said optimism carries little weight in the world of politics. Dead week might be an important topic among students, and it was a popular part of the Wagner/Peele platform, but the issue was lost in the shuffle at the hands of higher governmental powers.

"This student issue isn't at the forefront of the [Faculty Senate's] mind," Wagner said. "I think the time they have to dedicate to other issues is holding it up."

Dead week has become a pipe dream on the K-State campus because professors are known to have projects and tests due during the time many students would like to be studying for their finals. As representatives of the student body, Wagner and Peele wanted to push the issue through the necessary legislation in time for the spring

A look at events that took place during this week in history

TODAY 1862: CINCO DE MAYO BEGINS

During the French-Mexican War, a poorly supplied and outnumbered Mexican army under General Ignacio Zaragoza defeated a French army and attempted to capture Puebla de Los Angeles, a small town in east-central Mexico.

TUESDAY 1937: THE HINDENBURG BURNS

The airship Hindenburg, the largest dirigible ever built and the pride of Nazi Germany, burst into flames upon touching its mooring mast in Lakehurst, N.J., killing 36 passengers and crewmembers. Frenchman Henri Giffard constructed the first successful airship in 1852. His hydrogen-filled blimp carried a three-horsepower steam engine that turned a large propeller and flew at a speed of six miles per hour.

WEDNESDAY 1915: GERMAN SUBMARINE SINKS LUSITANIA

The earlier German attacks on merchant ships off the south coast of Ireland prompted the British Admiralty to warn the Lusitania to avoid the area or take simple evasive action, like zigzagging to confuse U-boats plotting the vessel's course.

THURSDAY 1984: SOVIETS BOYCOTT OLYMPICS

Claiming that its athletes would not be safe from protests and possible physical attacks, the Soviet Union announced that it would not compete in the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles.

FRIDAY 1914: PRESIDENT WILSON PROCLAIMS THE 1ST MOTHER'S DAY HOLIDAY

In 1914, President Woodrow Wilson issued a presidential proclamation that officially established the first national Mother's Day holiday to celebrate America's mothers.

Sunset Revival benefit draws about 3,000 to Sigma Nu

During Sunset Revival, several girls dance to Distance to Empty's cover of "Billie Jean" on Saturday afternoon. The five bands on the front stage played one hour sets, while the seven bands that played on the back stage played for 45 minutes.

A sea of purple tie-dye could be seen all day Saturday in front of the Sigma Nu fraternity house, where 11 bands took turns rocking two stages to help raise money for the Christopher Reeve Foundation at the annual Sunset Revival.

The main stage was set up on the front lawn at the bottom of the hill, and the second stage was tucked away in the back between two basketball goals.

Ben Meyer, sophomore in business management and Sigma Nu's organizer for the event, said the day went well overall; and more than $7,000 was raised for the Christopher Reeve Foundation. The foundation is dedicated to curing spinal-cord injury by funding innovative research and improving the quality of life for people living with paralysis through grants, information and advocacy, according to the Christopher and Dana Reeve Foundation Web site.

"The biggest thing I was concerned with was weather," Meyer said. "[The weather] turned out well."

Meyer also said more than 3,000 people attended the event and 1,000 people were at the concert at any given time.

The event started at 11 a.m., but the lawn didn't start to fill until about 2 p.m. Not many attendees arrived solo. Attendees in purple shirts arrived in droves when Lloyd Likes Mike, a local band, started playing.

While still warming up, Lloyd Likes Mike preformed a quick version of the theme song from the popular TV show "The Office."

Many of the "Sunsetters" spent the afternoon hanging out with friends.

Joey Harper, freshman in business management, attended Sunset Revival for the first time. Harper said he enjoyed being outside and hanging out with his friends.

Because the Sunset Revival is a well-attended annual event, there also was a great deal of anticipation leading up to the event.

Harper and like most of the other first-timers, said he didn't know how the day would turnout.

"I didn't know what to expect," Harper said. "I did expect that it was going to be a good time."

'African Nite' educates guests with speakers, music, food

Lucy Opit, employee of Maasai Braids & Gift Shop, works her booth at the "African Night 2008" event Saturday in the City Hall Auditorium.

Food vendors, hundreds of people from different ethnicities and various flags from African nations surrounded the Manhattan City Hall Auditorium Saturday at K-State's second-annual African Student Union's "African Nite."

David Hartnett, university distinguished professor in biology and ASU faculty adviser, started the night's program and showcased the beauty of Africa through various trivia and facts that most Americans don't get a chance to see, he said.

Hartnett conducts research in Africa and also has taught at the University of Botswana. He has served as adviser for three years and enjoys meeting and getting to know the African students at K-State, he said.

"It's a good opportunity and for people to get a better appreciation of the diversity that Africa has," Hartnett said.

Mayor Mark Hatesohl spoke about the number of contributions that some African students have made to the Manhattan and K-State communities.

A group of five people sang "Senegalse Song," which means "It's hard being famous."

Many K-State students said they attended the event to learn more about the continent of Africa.

Lauren Cuevas, freshman in biology, attended the event with her friends and said she thought the event would be a great alternative to other Saturday night activities.

Before dinner was served, a poem and a dance were presented to the audience.

The poem, "A Wake for Okigbo," is performed in Africa after a person's death to symbolize the glory of their lives.

The reggae dance had the audience's attention as the dancers danced with red, yellow and green flags.

One of the dancers told the audience about how the colors were represented, with red representing the Africans during their independence, yellow representing the military and green representing the color of African land.

The audience was then served a buffet of African cuisine. Every dish was from a different country and culture in Africa.

"The dinner is the climax of everything," said Danvas Mabeya, graduate student in sociology and ASU member.

During dinner, people had the opportunity to mingle with one another; visit the vendors who sold African art, clothing, jewelry and books; and enjoy the African music playing in the background.

"The food is great, free and a nice gift to K-State and the Manhattan community," Hartnett said.

After dinner, a number of entertainment acts as well as a fashion show took place.

The fashion show featured fashion displayed from different countries in Africa. An African art raffle excited members of the audience who hoped to win a prize to take home.

Mabeya said he was pleased with the turnout.

"This year is better than last year," he said.

HIT OR MISS

The editorial board selects Hit or Miss topics and writes them after a majority vote. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

HIT | ALMOST DONE

After five more days of classes, we have one painful week of finals before freedom and summertime sets in.

MISS | HALE CROWDS

With the semester wrapping up and finals nearing, the library is being swarmed with students. Try not to spread out more than you need and save some room for others.

HIT | GRADUATES

An early congratulations to all of the graduating seniors. Your four, five, six, etc., years of work is finally paying off.

MISS | BIKE THEFTS

Last week brought about three cases of bike theft and three hit-and-run car accidents. Though biking is more efficient and better for the environment, that doesn't mean people should steal bikes.

HIT | CINCO DE MAYO

Celebrating Cinco de Mayo provides another great reason to eat Mexican food and drink alcohol.

MISS | IMPOSSIBLE FINALS

Boo to all of the classes whose finals you have to score at least 100 percent on to pass or get a reasonable grade in the course.

Italian food, night of music, key to 2nd date

AUBREE CASPER

In a world in which hooking up on a Friday or Saturday with some random guy or girl leads to broken-hearted Monday mornings, students should invest in the local flavor of Manhattan to enjoy a date worthy of getting a follow-up call, text or a message on Facebook.com the next day.

While our small, Kansas town seems to lend itself to raging house parties and a plethora of packed bars on the weekends, the dates that create lasting love connections are bound to extend beyond the cliché party nights.

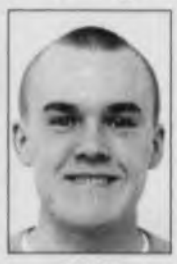
With the right atmosphere and a well-played first date, students can find themselves laughing along with their residence-hall floor mates during a floor member's "walk of shame" next Sunday morning after shacking with someone, instead of being that guy. Many options exist if one takes the time to actually plan out a date that doesn't involve meeting up at party on Bertrand.

According to Men's Health Magazine's online dating tips, weekends aren't for first dates. I agree. Let's paint a picture of my perfect date, starting with a Wednesday or Thursday night rendezvous. Fridays and Saturdays are too easy and usually at least one person wants to be out with their friends instead.

I enjoy cooking and baking, so I would have my date meet me at my place for a late Italian dinner with an exotic dessert. After dinner, we would walk to down to Aggieville and meander over to PJ's Pub to enjoy a local band. Though going to a loud, smoky bar breaks almost all dating rules found online, PJ's is one of my favorite places in Manhattan, and to be on a date with me, you must love rock music.

Typically, musical tastes tend to make or break a potential relationship, but there are three advantages to this location. First, seeing a band neither of you have heard is an instant conversation-starter. You will probably have a response to each song, so share it. Secondly, the loudness can be beneficial.

At fancy dinners, dates are more likely to be placed sitting across the table from each other, with three or four feet of space and a large piece of wood inhibiting physical contact. At PJ's however, you have to get nice and close and talk right into each others' ear to be heard. A few hours of this and who knows what sparks might ignite.



Finally, the term "set," used to refer to one particular band's time on stage, can also be translated into a "set" amount of time, and I personally can't bring myself to walk out in the middle of a band's performance, so the pressure to stick it out for even the most terrible band can add 45 minutes to an hour to a date.

After PJ's, it's time to head over to the Bluestem Bistro for a quieter location to help stop the ringing in my ears and to allow time to talk about the night. Eventually, a long, deep conversation will find its way into our dialogue. At this point, it's time to start heading back to my house where, after an undeniable connection (hopefully), my date and I will decide to pop in a movie. Then, as a perfect end to a perfect date, the skies will unleash monsoon-like rains and my date and I would dart outside and run through the streets. However, my date would remember his 9:30 chemistry class and, while wrapped up in a few of my towels with a goofy smile on his face, he would drive off into the night.

And, since he has my towels, a second meeting is a must.

Aubree Casper is a freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications. Please send comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Perfect date complete with picnic, dancing

BLAKE OSBORN

It is a fair summer day, the wind is slight and the sky is big and blue, with slender clouds framing the sun. I pull up in my red Mini Cooper with the speakers blasting Elton John's mellifluous voice into the air.

I run up to my lady and sweep her off of her feet and gallantly carry her to the car, balancing a dozen roses between my teeth.

Before burning rubber in my Mini, we have a 15-minute dance warm-up to the classic dance song that asks "What is Love? Baby don't hurt me, no more."

Then I escort her to City Park to have a delightful three-course picnic of "Dashers" from the Kramer Dining Center. The first Styrofoam box that I open has two hearty hot dogs with the quintessential ketchup and mustard.

Quickly devouring the two hot dogs, I mindlessly forget that I do not have three, but my date graciously forgives me.

Ashamed of my gluttony, I quickly move to the next box to unveil the second course of the meal. Lo and behold, there is the famous thin-crust pizza from Kramer – three whole slices. I offer her two slices and eat the other, and then we proceed to open the final box.

Dessert, oh my, it is time for dessert. We split a glob of the famous Kansas dirt as we watch the cardinals and sparrows dance through the air.

Of course, while we are eating our meal, some punk will drive up in his scooter and try to take my girl and my Kansas dirt, but he does not get very far – because I punch his lights out – I mean, I tackle the guy, knock him silly and steal his scooter as my date and I take off like smoke, disappearing from the scene.

After saving my date from the pugnacious stranger, we drive off to Tad's to share a shaved ice – the super berry flavor – and we watch the sun sink down the horizon like a drop of burning gold.

Full of sugar, I get very excited and am bursting with energy. I pick her up once more and carry her to the car to take her to our next destination.

We then drive into the young night and decide to stroll up and down the streets of Aggieville. In my off-the-hook passion for my date, I jump onto a bench, whip out a love poem by Yeats and throw the words out of my mouth like my tongue is on fire – I send my yawps of joy for her out into the air, and, naturally, a crowd gathers, cheering and all kinds of excited. Pretty soon we both get restless, so we decide to bolt.

Next, we go to the top of Manhattan Hill to get lost in the stars above. Then, with soft music coming from the speakers of the scooter, we slow dance to classical music. We do a little waltz and foxtrot and decide to relocate.

To finish off the evening, we ride down to Poyntz Avenue to dance the night away to Bruce Springsteen's "Dancing in the Dark." As we dance, a crowd gathers. So we boogie until the morning comes.

A grand evening, indeed.

New 1-story Aggieville building has fiery past, uncertain future

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A dirt lot at 1120 and 1124 Moro Street remained an empty space enclosed with a chain-link fence for 10 years. Students walked past the lot year after year, probably unaware of its history.

In mid 2007, nearly one decade after a fire with an undetermined cause ended three businesses, a one-story structure took shape.

With a "For Lease" sign in place, Manhattan residents and students are left wondering what new businesses would soon call Aggieville their home.

A NEWSPAPER'S ACCOUNT

"Fire in the 'Ville: A Saturday morning fire engulfs the northeast corner of Aggieville, destroying businesses, buildings and traditions." "Aggieville fire incinerates 3 businesses."

On Mon., Feb. 16, 1998, the Kansas State Collegian ran a special edition that included stories, graphics, pull quotes and photographs about a fire that changed Aggieville.

Two days earlier, three Aggieville businesses and 83 years of memories were engulfed in flames.

At 3:42 a.m. Sat., Feb. 14, 1998, a fire at the 11th block of Moro Street was reported to the Manhattan Fire Department. Crews arrived on the scene four minutes later, according to a Feb. 16, 1998, Collegian article.

But it was too late. The fire was controlled by 7 a.m., but it took three fire trucks, 48 firefighters and additional off-cuty firefighters to relieve those on duty during the four-hour effort.

Firefighters sprayed rubble throughout the day to cool the ashes; witnesses reported bursts of flames shooting into the streets after rubble fell on Moro Street, according to a Feb. 16, 1998, Collegian article.

Adventure Travel, Club Karrington and Greek's Pizzeria were completely destroyed with area losses estimated at more than $1 million, according to a Feb. 18, 1998, Collegian article. Buildings located to the east and west also sustained heavy damage – Speed Wash Laundry's walls and roof collapsed because of the weight of water and rubble from the Adventure Travel building.

The Futon Store and On the Wild Side also sustained smoke and water damage.

AN UNDETERMINED CAUSE

The fire's exact cause was never determined. On Feb. 19, 1998, Manhattan Fire Department officials announced they had closed their investigation into the fire's cause. According to a Manhattan Mercury article, investigators said they could not conclusively say the fire was electrical because some evidence had been destroyed in the fire's aftermath. Because the buildings were older, no fire devices like fire walls or fire doors were present that could have prevented the fire from spreading as rapidly as it did.

A state fire marshal's arson K-9 unit, which was trained to detect the presence of flammable materials on the scene, found no evidence that an accelerant was used to start the fire, said Steve Burnett, then-assistant director of technical services for the Manhattan Fire Department, according to the Mercury article. However, burn patterns showed that the fire probably started 10-15 feet inside the front of Adventure Travel.

AFTER THE FIRE: REBUILDING PLANS

Three months after the fire, the half-block's business operators started rebuilding and reopening. The Futon Store, then at 1126 Moro Street, reopened its renovated building. Speed Wash Laundry, 1118 Moro Street, was rebuilt. But the lot mainly affected remained open – and its former businesses' owners had moved on. Connie and Charles Busch owned the Club Karrington Property at the time, and Connie said in a May 15, 1998, Manhattan Mercury article that she had no plans at the time for the property.

The Busches also had owned the building that once held Greek's Pizzeria, 1124 Moro Street. Connie told the Mercury in 1998 that she planned to not reopen Adventure Travel. Calls to the Busches were not immediately returned.

On Feb. 8, 1999, Rusty Wilson purchased the vacant property "to increase the business in Aggieville and diversify the area," according to a Feb. 9, 1999, Collegian article. Wilson is the owner of Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, also in Aggieville. Calls to Wilson were not immediately returned.

"There will not be more Aggieville property created, so I consider this area to be very valuable," said Wilson in a Feb. 9, 1999, Collegian article. "I did it for Aggieville. There are a lot of bars that keep popping up, and there are too many already. Aggieville is here for the students."

A fire on Feb. 16, 1998 destroyed three businesses at 1120 and 1124 Moro Street.

In 1999, then-head K-State baseball coach Mike Clark started negotiations to construct two, 18-hole golf courses in the vacant lot. According to a Jan. 19, 2000, Collegian article, Clark said he had the idea of a miniature golf course for six or seven years. But one month later, Clark said construction was on hold because he wanted to commit 100 percent to his coaching career. He also said the golf course would not be a "large money maker" and his main investor had another financial opportunity come up, according to a Feb. 29, 2000, Collegian article. Rusty Wilson put the lot up for sale or lease in mid February 2000.

McCullough Development Inc., which now manages the lot, declined to comment on the property's current owner.

Junior Loren Groves competes in the weight throw at the Ward Haylett Invitational Saturday. Groves' throw of 214-5 set a new K-State record and also beat her personal best of 208-4.

Groves takes title, school record in hammer

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Junior Loren Groves had the K-State record, the R.V. Christian Track record, the event title and five new personal-best throws in the weight throw by the end of the Ward Haylett Invitational on Saturday.

Groves topped the K-State record of 209-04 feet with her first two attempts, unleashing throws of 214-01 and 214-05. She went on to win the event and finished the day with five legal throws that all beat her previous personal-best of 208-04.

Groves' record-breaking throws were aided by a new warm-up technique she devised with throwing coach Steve Fritz. She warmed up by throwing only a 4.5 kilogram hammer instead of the regulation 4-kilogram hammer. Usually, she throws the heavier implement a few times, and then throws the regulation hammer a few times in warm-ups, before throwing in competition.

"I think it helped because I could move the ball faster," Groves said. "I think it helped give me some confidence, because I knew it was going to be lighter. Usually my first throws with the four [kg] have been my best."

Groves set another personal record and earned a second event victory in the discus, with a throw of 173-08 feet. The mark betters her previous best by nearly three feet.

The Wildcats captured nine event victories overall at the Ward Haylett Invitational, the team's only home meet of the outdoor season. Junior sprinter Mike Myer also captured a pair of event victories, taking the title in the 100-meter dash and 200-meter dash. Myer first won the 100-meter dash with a wind-aided time of 10.35 seconds, and then took the 200-meter dash, finishing with a time of 21.05 seconds.

Senior sprinter Marnyka Honeycutt earned a regional qualifying mark and set a personal best, in route to winning the women's 200-meter dash, with a time of 23.91 seconds. She earned another regional mark with a career-best, wind-aided time of 11.48 seconds in the 100-meter dash, to take second.

Honeycutt also ran on the women's 4x100-meter dash team. The team was unable to finish the race. She said before the meet she was not sure how she would run, competing in three events in one day.

"I felt pretty good," Honeycutt said. "I thought I was going to be a little bit tired because all the races were so close together, but I actually managed to pull it off."

The Wildcats continued their sprinting success when senior Donniece Parrish won the women's 400-meter dash, in a personal-best time of 54.54 seconds.

The women secured another event title in the long jump. Senior Candice Mills, freshman Nina Kokot and sophomore Stephanie Hejde swept the event, taking first, second and third respectively.

The Wildcats' national-champion high jumper, Scott Sellers, won the event with a jump of 7-00.50 feet, despite being hampered by a lingering foot injury.

He hurt his foot at the Texas Relays in April, and because of it, he had not competed in the three weeks prior to Saturday's invitational.

"It's more a technical issue rather than it is the ability to jump high," Rovelto said. "But the reason the technique is not right is the foot. The horsepower is there, the strength is there, it's just a matter of getting the foot squared away."

Sophomore Sam James also won the 800-meter run in a time of 1:51.65.

The Invitational was the main event of the team's reunion weekend, which invited friends, families and alumni to the meet. Rovelto said it was great to see so many former athletes come back for the meet.

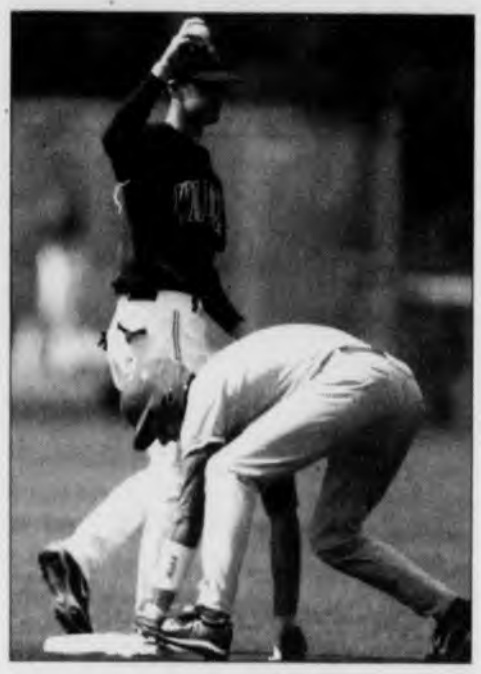
"Half the people in the room were people who had competed at the world championships or at the Olympic games," Rovelto said. "So it was pretty neat to see all those people back, and they've had a lot of neat and complimentary things to say about the facilities."

WOMEN'S ROWING

Varsity finishes 2nd at Big 12

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's varsity rowing crews finished second in their respective races behind Texas Saturday at the Big 12 Conference Invitational.



The Longhorns continued their dominance by winning the event for the seventh-consecutive year. The first varsity team took second in its race, finishing four seconds behind Texas.

In the second varsity race, K-State finished two seconds behind Texas for second place. Kansas, the only other team at the Invitational, finished last in both varsity races.

The Novice 8 crew was the only other Wildcat team to participate in Saturday's event. The crew finished third in its race, behind boats from Texas and Kansas.

The K-State rowing team will continue its season in two weeks at the NCAA Central/South Regional on May 17.

Cats clash; Missouri comes out on top

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State went into the weekend needing to get as many wins as it could, but could only come up with one win against No. 14-ranked Missouri.

K-State's pitching didn't show up in the first two games as it gave up 24 runs and 35 hits. The Wildcats (22-25, 7-14 Big 12 Conference) hit well also, scoring 17 runs off of 27 hits.

But the last game of the weekend was the opposite of the first two, as the two teams combined for 15 hits and seven runs.

FRIDAY: K-STATE 10, MISSOURI 13

K-State's starting pitcher, junior Lance Hoge, gave up four runs in the first inning last weekend against Texas and he didn't improve over the week as Hoge gave up five runs in the first inning in a 13-10 loss against Missouri (31-16, 11-10 Big 12).

Hoge came back in the second inning and gave up two more runs before he was pulled for junior Todd Vogel, but the score was already 7-2 in favor of the Tigers. Missouri scored three more before the sixth.

K-State fought back into the game with runs in the fifth, sixth and seventh innings. The Wildcats scored three in the sixth with junior Drew Biery singling to drive in junior Byron Wiley and sophomore Adam Muenster.

After the seventh, Missouri led 10-7 and seemed to close the door in the bottom of the eighth inning when the Tigers scored three runs off of four hits. Missouri's Ryan Lollis had a leadoff home run.

SATURDAY: K-STATE 7, MISSOURI 11

Another ninth-inning comeback, falling short was the story for K-State as it lost 11-7 to Missouri in the second game of the three-game series.

The Wildcats trailed 5-11 going into the ninth, and scored two runs quickly as junior Drew Biery singled and then junior Nate Tenbrink doubled. The next batter, sophomore Adam Muenster, drove in Biery and reached on an error by the second baseman. A couple batters later, senior Brett Scott singled to drive in one more run and load up the bases. Sophomore Justin Bloxom came up to the plate next and hit into a double ending the late-game rally.

The starting pitcher for the Wildcats was senior Brad Hutt, the usually reliable pitcher, gave up eight runs off of 13 hits in five innings. He moved to 4-4 on the year with the loss.

Besides scoring two runs in the ninth, the Wildcats scored one in the first and two in the seventh and eighth. For the game, Biery went 3-for-4 and had two runs batted in.

SUNDAY: K-STATE 4, MISSOURI 3

K-State had another comeback in the ninth and this time it wasn't wasted, as the Wildcats beat Missouri 4-3 in 10 innings on Sunday.

Down one in the ninth, K-State's freshman Carter Jurica singled with one out, then senior Brett Scott doubled to advance Jurica to third. After a pitch hit junior Drew Biery, sophomore Justin Bloxom hit a sacrifice fly to drive in Jurica to tie the game.

The work wasn't done, though, as the game went into extra innings. In the 10th inning Missouri's defense went array, as sophomore Adam Muenster reached first on an error by the third baseman. After Missouri intentionally walked junior Byron Wiley, both Wiley and Muenster stole a base, but the catcher made a throwing error, allowing Muenster to come home to score the winning run.

Kentucky Derby showcases triumph of Big Brown, downfall of filly Eight Belles

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOUISVILLE, Ky. – Boy, did Eight Belles hang with the boys.

All that heart and her gallant fight, however, ended in the worst of all possible ways: a breakdown, an ambulance on the track. And, with no other choice, she was euthanized by injection.

The day began with hope and pomp. Bolstered by the sentimental support from 157,770 fans and endorsed by presidential contender Hillary Clinton and cheered by daughter Chelsea, the filly finished second in the Kentucky Derby on Saturday. She crossed the wire 4 3/4 lengths behind favorite Big Brown. Then, with the second-largest crowd in Derby history still whooping it up, Eight Belles collapsed with two broken front ankles.

The magnitude of what happened was slow to reach the fans at Churchill Downs. Not only was a horse down, but it was the filly. And horse racing – with the memory of Barbaro still fresh and the death of a horse coming only a day earlier on Kentucky Oaks Day – had to confront grief one more time.

"There was no way to save her," trainer Larry Jones said. "She couldn't stand. "She ran an incredible race. She ran the race of her life."

Jones' voice broke and tears glistened in his eyes as he considered his barn without Eight Belles' head poking out of her stall.

"Losing animals like this isn't fun.," he said. " It's not supposed to happen. We're heartbroke. We're going to miss her, no doubt."

The field of 19 colts and the dark gray filly were galloping out around the first turn when Eight Belles suddenly went down on both front legs and jockey Gabriel Saez slid off.

"When we passed the wire I stood up," said a distraught Saez, a first-time Derby rider. "She started galloping funny. I tried to pull her up. That's when she went down."

Eight Belles appeared to be galloping out normally around the first turn and was headed into the start of the backstretch when she dropped without warning.

"That's one of the saddest things I've ever seen," said fan Kathleen Brower of Louisville. "It just takes the wind out of the sails."

Cultural celebrations

Students spend Cinco de Mayo with families

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cinco de Mayo, the celebration of the Mexican victory over French forces in 1862, is now a Mexican holiday that brings friends and families together to enjoy each others' company and most importantly, food.

Celebrators often organize dinner parties and Mexican-themed businesses generally offer specials and discounts in honor of the day.

Jose Uriel Estrada, senior in secondary education and member of K-State's Hispanic American Leadership Organization, said his family celebrates the holiday in the traditional way.

"We always like to get together with family," Estrada said. "To have a meal together."

He said his family spends the day grilling Mexican food like Carne Asada and listening to traditional Mexican music.

"Usually we got together with all the family and put on some Vicente Fernandez music," he said.

Estrada said this year it will be difficult for the entire family to get together because he and his sister are living in Manhattan while the rest of the family lives in southeast Kansas.

Though it will be a smaller group, Estrada said he plans to still celebrate the holiday.

"I think me and my sister will just go out to dinner somewhere and eat some Mexican food," Estrada said. "It won't be on the scale that it usually is."

No matter what day the holiday lands on, Estrada said he usually ends up celebrating the holiday over a weekend.

"If it lands on a weekend, great. But if not, we will just get together over the weekend," Estrada said. "It's basically family time for us."

Cruz Rivero, senior in business administration, said he celebrated the holiday this weekend by sharing a barbecue with friends.

"Since we are kind of busy with school, we had it Saturday," Rivero said. "Just a small get together."

Rivero is from Dodge City, Kan., where Cinco de Mayo is widely celebrated. There is a large fiesta in town and many smaller parties throughout the city.

Rivero also said there is a large amount of tradition involved in the holiday.

"There is a lot of traditional food and music," Rivero said.

He also said many choose to wear traditional Mexican dress on Cinco de Mayo to celebrate the day.

Businesses around Manhattan are also getting in on the party and some Mexican restaurants are having specials, and others are just bracing for the higher than usual traffic.

Juan Hernandez, manager of La Fiesta Mexican restaurant said his restaurant will offer half-price margaritas.

CINCO DE MAYO: FACT OR FICTION?

Holiday honors historic battle

Myth: Cinco De Mayo is the Mexican day of independence.

Fact: While Cinco de Mayo is a national holiday in Mexico, it does not mark the day Mexico won its independence form Spain in 1810.

According to the History Channel's Web site, Cinco de Mayo is the celebration of the Mexican Army's defeat of French forces in 1862.

In the early 1860s, Mexico was heavily debted to several European countries. When Benito Juarez took control of the country as president, he was forced to default on the loans.

Spain, Britain and France sent naval forces to take the money back.

Mexico was able to reach agreements with Spain and Britain, but France used the opportunity to attempt to make Mexico a foreign state.

In response, General Ignacio Zaragoza scrounged up a small force of about 2,000 men and began fortifying the city of Puebla de Los Angeles in south central Mexico. The Mexican Army was shabby at best and fought against a well-supplied and heavily reinforced French detachment.

The battle only lasted one day, with more than 500 French killed, but about 100 died from the Mexican Army.

The battle was not a significant victory in the war against France, but the Mexican resistance was strengthened by the win. The French didn't actually withdraw from Mexico until six years later.

SEX AND THE CITY: THE LITTLE APPLE

Springtime weather leads to outdoor romps in tents, grass

MATT COMBES

As classes finally come to an end, students campus-wide are celebrating the idea of the warm months of freedom. Many enjoy barbecuing, some enjoy hitting the lakes and others enjoy getting down and dirty in the great outdoors.

No matter if you get frisky in a tent while on a camping excursion or take a break while hiking to do the horizontal hustle among a field of wildflowers, summer loving reaches whole new levels in the fresh air. However, there are a few key pointers to keep in mind while planning your porking picnic.

You must have the essentials in your picnic basket. If you are going for a home run, then make sure you pack condoms. They significantly lower the chances of contracting a fluid-spread sexually transmitted infection like chlamydia, and to a lesser extent the chances of contracting a skin-contact STIs like herpes.

If you or your partner are concerned with a condom fitting, realize a condom will always fit. If you do not believe me, know that I can pull one over my head and inflate it. If something that large ever comes towards your vagina or anus, run. However, too tight of a fit can be uncomfortable and also cause the proud soldier to stop saluting. Some companies make condoms that are a couple millimeters wider, allowing for stretch. For longer gentlemen, try brands like Beyond Seven.

Also, remember that with summer days come higher temperatures which are bad for condoms, so remember to keep them in the cool and avoid putting them in your pockets or wallet.

If your picnicking or outdoor plans involve some frisky play like oral sex, you will again want to make sure you pack some condoms – as most STIs can also be transmitted orally. Some brands also carry flavored condoms, like bubble gum, to make it all the more enjoyable. Along with condoms, dental dams are also important. These often – flavored squares of latex are placed against the orifice involved.

A cheaper option is to snip off the tip of your favorite flavored condom and then cut the resulting doughnut shape to form a square. If you're in a bind, non-microwaveable plastic wrap can be used.

Along with condoms and dental dams, a nice-sized bottle, or in some instances an extra-large squirt jug of water-based lube, is always handy to have around.

Just like condoms, lubrication comes in a variety of styles and flavors. The water-based part is essential as oil-based lubes will break down your condom or dental dam. Mustard, ketchup and mud are also all out of the question. Also, do not forget clean-up; moist towelettes or babywipes work wonders.

Location is everything. You do not want to get arrested and have it on your record for the rest of your life that you were booked for going at it in the middle of City Park.

Find someplace private, preferably not on public property – or throw a tent into the picture and just make sure your sound effects do not attract nosey tent neighbors, or local wildlife. Finally, make sure you are not in too tall of grass or on an ant hill. One word: ouch.

WEEKLY HOROSCOPES

AQUARIUS
(Jan. 21 - Feb. 19)
Try not to take others for granted. Tempers could get out of hand this week. Friends or groups that you're affiliated with might want you to contribute more cash than you can really afford.

PISCES
(Feb. 20 - March 20)
You can work in conjunction with those in the know in order to get to the bottom of any pending issue. You can make profitable investments if you purchase an art object for your home. Someone envious of your popularity might challenge you to a debate.

ARIES
(March 21 - April 20)
Look into any educational activities involving the whole family. You'll have great insight. Think before you act. Your hypnotic eyes will capture the hearts of those who interest you.

TAURUS
(April 21 - May 21)
Set a limit, or you'll wind up on a tight budget. Your ability to deal with humanitarian groups will enhance your reputation. Your home environment appears to be a little shaky. Look before you leap.

GEMINI
(May 22 - June 21)
Don't overspend on children or on large purchases. You might find yourself caught in the middle of an argument that has nothing to do with you. Property deals look good.

CANCER
(June 22 - July 22)
Don't let an incident at work play on your mind. You can sort out any differences you have in an amiable manner. Pamper yourself for a change.

LEO
(July 23 - Aug. 22)
You need to be active and spend time with friends you enjoy. Try to deal with the problems of those less fortunate; however, don't allow them to make unreasonable demands. Investments might be misrepresented this week.

VIRGO
(Aug. 23 - Sept. 23)
Be careful when dealing with investments. Talk to an older, established individual about your present situation. Educational pursuits can bring interesting, helpful people.

LIBRA
(Sept. 24 -Oct. 23)
You will be ready to jump on anyone who gets in the way of your progress this week. Proceed with caution if operating equipment or vehicles. Do your job and then spend some time with family; you'll be glad you did.

SCORPIO
(Oct. 24 - Nov. 22)
Deception and doubts may surround your involvement with friends and relatives. Use your charm to get your own way. You might be likely to have difficulties with females.

ROMEO & JULIET | Audience impressed

now, and we can make each other laugh."

JULIET

Martens said she has developed as an actor since she was cast as Juliet.

"I've grown in every show I've done, but I've grown the most in this particular one," she said. "I initially didn't think I had anything in common with Juliet's character. I needed to find a way to relate to her, and in doing that, I learned a lot about myself as an actress."

Martens said playing Juliet's character was more challenging than past roles because of the wide range of emotions she had to perform.

"This role was much more emotional," she said. "I'm usually in musicals, and Juliet's role is serious and emotional. She was sad, in love, frightened, angry and happy throughout the show. The range is so much broader than any other emotional range I've had to go through in a show before."

Martens has been acting since her freshman year in high school. Martens said she auditioned for the role of Juliet, and the directors decided she would be a good fit for the character. She said aspects of Juliet's character are inspirational.

"I really like her passion and her strength in how she goes after what the truly thinks is right," she said. "Playing her was challenging though, because of her age. Her character's only 13 and I'm 21, and I didn't want to come off as too old."

Martens said she thinks she was a good match for the Juliet's character because they both try to find happiness in any situation.

GOOD REVIEWS

Some audience members were impressed with Culbert's and Martens' performances.

"Romeo showed a lot of emotion and is really getting the feeling across from the role," said Tom Badeen, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management. "Juliet's very good at getting across the innocence of being 13."

DEAD WEEK | Peele to still push issue

semester, but Frank Spikes, Faculty Senate president, said the policy was referred to academic or faculty affairs.

"[Wagner] was correct in respect to the order of priority," Spikes said. "As to where it is in that order, I don't know."

Peele said there was a student task force organized to make dead week more acceptable in the eyes of the Faculty Senate. A student group cannot implement changes, so it must wait for the issue to surface among Faculty Senate.

"There's one more meeting in May," Peele said. "I don't know if they've talked about it yet, but we're waiting for approval and suggestions from the Faculty Senate."

Wagner said Peele would continue to push the year-old campaign proposal and encouraged the Faculty Senate to resume talks of the issue.

"This is something Matt and I care a lot about," she said. "We got a lot of good feedback from students last year, so I will keep pushing [the Faculty Senate] to consider it."

Student opinion about a class-free week seems to vary according to study habits.

"I know it would benefit some people who would actually take advantage of it," said Tim Murry, sophomore in geology. "But it doesn't really affect me because if I had a week to study for something I would put it off until the last minute."

CAMPAIGN | Penny Drive raises funds

a board meeting for HIV/AIDS and found out she was an assistant in mass communications.

"We looked to see how we could get together and she mentioned she had a public relations campaign class. That is how we came together," Madison said. "This is the second semester and what we did this semester was look at what last semester's class did and expanded on it."

Along with the petition drive, the Penny Drive was also held to help raise money. Madison said money from the Penny Drive helped develop new stickers and posters. The rest of the money raised went to helping people with HIV/AIDS.

The Center for Engagement's Literacy Project and the Tilford Grant on campus funded the campaign. Muturi said this grant helps students learn more about getting out in to the community and learning more from that perspective, and that it is going to be a two-year project.

The event will also continue to raise awareness, as Muturi said they will be handing out materials to inform attendees about Global AIDS Week.

"All of these activities are building into the Global AIDS Week, from Dec. 1 to Dec. 5. So, we are starting early, but it is all going to be tied in to the Global AIDS Week," Muturi said.
